FitzPatrick Fired, No Cause Given

By MARK HUME
Times Staff

After 31 years service to the city of Victoria Terry FitzPatrick was fired Tuesday from his $30,000-a-year job as chief of the city's personnel department.

No reasons were given for the dismissal and FitzPatrick said he was shocked.

The 60-year-old official has been with city since 1947 and was just five years from retirement.

He said he planned to go immediately to his lawyer but refused to speculate on whether he'd sue the city.

"I just can't believe it," he said minutes after city manager Jim Bramley had delivered the verdict, reached in the mayor's office after three hours of deliberation by council.

"I've had nothing officially . . . no complaints either verbally or in writing about my performance."

He said that as personnel chief, he has had to fire employees over the years but he said he'd never have dismissed anyone in the style council dismissed him.

The firing came in the wake of a personnel department study by Vancouver management consultant Gordon Newhouse and Associates.

Newhouse has not yet filed a report with council but it is understood he gave a briefing to Mayor Mike Young. The mayor later contacted individual aldermen and raised the subject of FitzPatrick's dismissal.

Aldermen could be heard shouting as council met in camera for an hour in the morning and for two hours later in the mayor's office.

After the meeting some aldermen left by the back way to avoid reporters. Those who did face reporters wouldn't comment. It is understood Mayor Young won an oath of silence from aldermen after discussing at some length the legal implications any statements might have if the issue goes to the courts.

Although aldermen refused to discuss the meeting it is known that at least two — Larry Ryan and Robin Blencoe — were firmly opposed to the firing at the outset.

Ryan especially has voiced strong objections to Newhouse and the study, saying that personnel matters should not be dealt with by outside consultants.

In a press conference to announce the final decision, Young refused to give any hint as to how the aldermen voted or reasons for the decision.

"We're not dealing with the matter of cause or no cause," said Young when asked what FitzPatrick had done to deserve sudden dismissal after 31 years.

Neither would Young reveal the kind of settlement to be offered, but he did say that city hall staff had been instructed to work out terms.

"The agreement to be worked out with Mr. FitzPatrick will reflect whether it (the decision) is fair or not," added Young.

He also said he doubted the matter will ever go to the courts, indicating that severance pay to be offered was substantial.

As he left city hall shortly after hearing of his dismissal FitzPatrick said he was worried about his future and more immediately — how to tell the Camosun College class he teaches on personnel relations that he'd just been dismissed.

HOTEL BANDITS GRAB $1,500

Bandits hit two city hotels overnight and got nearly $1,500.

A Victoria police spokesman said $671 was taken from the Canterbury Inn, 310 Gorge Road East, after two men — one brandishing a handgun — the other wearing a nylon stocking mask, entered the lobby at 9:45 p.m. and ordered the desk clerk to open the till.

After scooping out about $470 in cash, the man wearing the mask forced the clerk into a rear office where he found a bank bag containing another $200.

The police spokesman said the same men entered the lobby of the Harbour Towers Hotel, 345 Quebec, about 12:35 a.m., and held up two employees counting out the day's receipts.

The masked man grabbed the money and then vaulted over the counter while his partner covered him with the gun.

The bandit also entered a back office and demanded the employee hand over a cash box.

Police said the men fled with about $825.

Police said the gunman was in his mid-20s, stocky, with brown hair and dark complexion. The man wearing the mask was about five feet seven inches tall, slighter and with dark brown hair.

Dentists Plan 8.9% Fee Hike

VANCOUVER (CP) —B.C. dentists claim inflation has put the bite on them so they are about to nip their patients' wallets by an average of 8.9 per cent next year.

The new fee schedule issued by the College of Dental Surgeons of British Columbia is designed to provide dentists with a net income hike of six per cent in 1979, Kenneth Croft, the college's managing director, said Tuesday.

The hike is necessary, he said, to counter an anticipated 11 per cent general increase in the cost of doing business next year.

However the B.C. and Yukon Building and Construction Trades Council in a letter to the college, pointed out that labor is at present being told to limit its wage demands to five per cent to exercise economic restraint when " we are well aware that the cost of living continues to rise at a level greater than five per cent."

LATEST GALLUP POLL:

Liberal Support Slumps to 41%

Times News Services

TORONTO — With 15 federal byelections coming up Oct. 16, the Liberals had 41 per cent of the decided vote in September and the Progressive Conservatives 38 per cent, a Gallup Poll released today shows.

The poll by the Canadian Institute of Public Opinion shows the Liberals dropped four percentage points from August and that the Conservatives, leading everywhere except in Quebec, gained three percentage points.

The New Democratic Party had 17 per cent of the decided vote, up two percentage points from August. Others had the remaining four per cent of the decided vote.

The level of undecided voters, which dropped to 27 per cent last May and now has risen again, accounts for about one-third of the electorate, the poll shows.

It shows that the Liberals' share of the decided vote in September is two percentage points below their support in the July, 1974, election and the lowest since April.

The poll was taken Sept. 7, 8 and 9, during the time former labor minister John Munro resigned after admitting he had broken the party's code of ethics by telephoning a Hamilton judge to give a character reference for a constituent about to be sentenced for assault.

It also was during that time that Finance Minister Jean Chretien announced a pre-Christmas budget in the face of a dollar that had hit a 45-year low, the threat of double-digit inflation and close to one million jobless.

The poll is based on 1,013 interviews with eligible voters in their homes across Canada. A sample of this size is accurate within four percentage points 19 in 20 times.

"Byelections are always tough for the governing party," Environment Minister Len Marchand said as he entered a cabinet meeting.

Following release of the poll, spokesmen for all political parties said the decreased support for the Liberals indicates the governing party will fare badly in the 15 byelections.

A spokesman for Progressive Conservative Leader Joe Clark said the poll "proves what we've been saying all along — that the Conservatives are ahead in all provinces except Quebec."

Estimate Changes On Way

OTTAWA (CP) — The government will revise its estimates of economic growth and the spending deficit when a new budget is introduced later this fall, Finance Minister Jean Chretien said today.

He also told reporters at an impromptu news conference that the government has no intention of changing its policy on the dollar although its day-to-day tactics in the currency market will be modified to keep a few jumps ahead of international currency traders and speculators.

Meanwhile, the Canadian dollar strengthened further on international money markets in early trading today after having dived below 84 cents U.S. early this week.

By early afternoon it was quoted at 84.59 cents against its American counterpart on Toronto's inter-bank wholesale market.

It closed Tuesday at 84.39 U.S. cents after spending much of the day below 84 cents, dropping early from the 45-year low point of 83.89 reached at Monday's close.

Gold hit a record $223.00 an ounce on the Zurich and London bullion exchanges today. It was the second time in two days gold was above the $220.25-an-ounce high reached in London Sept 25.

The U.S. dollar dropped both on the Tokyo and European exchanges.

Shells Spark Beirut Blaze

BEIRUT (UPI) — Heavy rocket, mortar and artillery fire raged unchecked in Beirut today between Syrian troops and Christian rightists, knocking out all electric power and touching off a huge fire. The Syrian navy was reported to have shelled the capital.

The right-wing Phalangist radio said about 500 people had been killed or wounded in the past 24 hours alone in the fierce fighting that escalated despite international moves to arrange a cease-fire.

The Phalangist radio said that a Syrian naval vessel entered the fight, shelling coastal positions. It said Christian shore batteries opened up on the ship and forced it away.

Beirut radio reported the presidential palace was hit by shells, damaging the building and wounding three members of the Republican guard.

Rocket, mortar and artillery fire thundered over a 20-mile area north and east of the capital, as the two sides battled for control of a key bridge commanding the northeast approaches to the city.

The heavy shelling knocked out the capital's entire electrical power grid, cutting off communication with the outside.

Christian cabinet ministers threatened to resign if Moslem Prime Minister Selim al Hoss remained in office after Oct. 12, the date set by President Elias Sarkis for formation of a new government of

More B.C. Drivers Belt Up

More British Columbians are now belting up when they drive, says B.C. superintendent of motor vehicles Robert Whitlock.

One year after the introduction of mandatory seat belt use in the province, Whitlock claims the buckle-up habit is catching on.

He cites the fact that highway death and serious injury tolls are down so far this year, and also the relatively small number of tickets — 1,052 — issued to motorists for non-compliance.

Fines issued to the offenders range from $15 to $100.

BOY, 5, HIT

A five-year-old boy is in serious condition in Royal Jubilee Hospital after being struck by a car on Bewdley Avenue in Work Point today while he was walking to school.

Names of the boy and the driver of the car were withheld by police.

Day Two: Union Bay

Marathoner Al Howie has passed the one-third mark in his run to Port Hardy to raise funds for the United Way.

After two days on the road Howie bedded down Tuesday night at Union Bay, 210 kilometres north of Victoria.

Howie, 33, says he's been averaging eight or nine miles an hour — it was 10 miles an hour on his non-stop jaunt from Victoria to Duncan Monday — and hopes to complete the 575-kilometre run by Sunday.

A United Way spokesman said Howie has raised pledges of $170 so far and more are expected as the week progresses.

B.C. Gov't To Probe Barrels of Death

The British Columbia government will launch an immediate investigation into reports that lethal chemicals are lying exposed in Delta, Environment Minister Jim Nielsen said today.

Nielsen said he will instruct his staff to begin the probe today, following reports by the Vancouver Province that hundreds of barrels filled with lethal solvents, mercury, chemicals linked to leukemia and several forms of liquid acid are leaking and rotting in two fields in the Vancouver suburb.

The morning newspaper said federal, provincial and municipal authorities have stated removal is not their responsibility, and even if they tried to move the materials, they would find it extremely difficult to get a disposal facility in Canada to accept the volatile and toxic wastes.

The two couples who own the land said it would cost between $3 million and $4 million to move the chemicals.

Nielsen said he questions the costs, and feels the federal government will be receptive in finding a method to dispose of the wastes.

He said he will be discussing with federal Environment Minister Len Marchand the feasibility of building a recycling plant in B.C. for disposal of such wastes.

The minister also said his staff will be looking into reports that chemical wastes are being dumped in ditches throughout the Fraser Valley.

Pope Buried

VATICAN CITY (CP) — Under dark skies and showers, red-robed cardinals of the Roman Catholic Church bid farewell today to Pope John Paul I, the "smiling pontiff" who reigned only 34 days.

In the sadness and joy of ancient liturgy, the cardinals celebrated the funeral mass on the broad marble steps of St. Peter's Basilica.

Shortly after the start of the service, rain fell and thousands of umbrellas blossomed in the crowd jammed into the vast square.

The funeral marked the beginning of nine days of official mourning. On the 10th day, cardinals will be sequestered in secrecy in the Sistine Chapel to elect John Paul's successor.

Meanwhile, A traditionalist Catholic group in Rome has demanded a judicial inquiry into the cause of the pope's death. (See story on Page 2).

Got Pre-Quitting Jitters?

Some of the people who have promised to join the Victoria Times' quit-smoking campaign are getting jittery now that the deadline, next Tuesday night, is drawing closer.

And there's no point in pretending there won't be some tough periods ahead — particularly for those who are heavily addicted. Toronto writer David Cotter, the one-time 50-a-day smoker whose 12-week series of articles will provide the guidelines and support for the nicotine banners, said in last Monday's introductory article that it's really useful to think about the reasons you want to quit.

A pamphlet put out by the Canadian Cancer Society comes at it another way: "Why you started to smoke is not important. Why you continue is!"

So this gives you another angle to consider. Take a little time to decide why you continue to smoke even though you know it's bad for you, that it's a dirty, expensive habit and it's even becoming uncomfortable to smoke in public places nowadays.

The pamphlet says: "Be honest about it. Rationalizing your smoking through some reason you've read or heard of is simply kidding yourself. Because reasons why people smoke vary with each individual. Some people need the lift smoking gives them. And let's face it, smoking can increase your heart rate by about 40 per cent, which in turn delivers more oxygen to your brain and more energy to body cells and organs. Trouble is the

RC Group Asks Full Probe In Pope John Paul's Death

VATICAN CITY (UPI) — A traditionalist Catholic group has called for a full judicial investigation into Pope John Paul's death, questioning the Vatican's official account.

Civilta Cristiana, a group loosely linked to rebel French Archbishop Marcel Lefebvre, formally asked the Vatican city-state's prosecutor to begin an inquiry.

Italian Cardinal Silvio Oddi said he was certain the college of cardinals, now in charge of the church pending the election of a new pope, "will not hold even a minimum investigation and will not even discuss the argument."

But Franco Antico, secretary general of Civilta Cristiana Cattolica — Christian Catholic Civilization — said any attempt by the cardinals to shelve a judicial process would be "immoral and unethical."

"If President Carter had died under such circumstances, you can be sure the American people would have demanded an explanation," he told UPI.

Asked if he suspected foul play in the pope's death, Antico said: "We have our information which we have placed in the hands of judicial authorities."

According to the Vatican, the pope died of a heart attack late Sept. 28. Antico dismissed the official explanation, which came from press spokesman Rev. Romeo Panciroli, as insufficient.

"There were no doubts over the death of Paul VI, John XXIII and Pius XII," he said. "Here, there are doubts at all levels. Rumors about the pope's death are on everyone's lips."

Antico said Civilta Cristiana first examined the possibility of raising a formal allegation that the pope had been killed by a person or persons unknown. However, he added "we are not seeking a scandal."

He said Civilta Cristiana was asking more than an autopsy. It wanted a full judicial inquiry into the circumstances of John Paul's demise. There were many unanswered questions, he said.

"For a start, where is his death certificate?" he asked. "How could the pope's light be left on all night without anyone going to see if anything was the matter with him? He could have been in agony for hours. Why does the Vatican have no emergency medical service? At the very least, this was a case of negligence."

Antico alleged the Vatican was continually altering the official version of how the pope died and what he was doing at the time of his death.

"For us, all this is very strange — on the verge of the incredible," he said.

Although Civilta Cristiana, which claims about 50,000 members in Italy, is loosely linked with French Archbishop Marcel Lefebvre, Antico said the movement was wholly behind Pope John Paul, and he criticized Lefebvre for not trying to make peace with the pontiff.

A team of Vatican doctors inspected the pope's body after the basilica closed for the night Tuesday and the Milan newspaper Corriere della Sera speculated they may have conducted an autopsy. The Vatican spokesman, the Rev. Romeo Panciroli, denied the speculation.

"It was a normal check that lasted about 20 minutes, conducted by a team of doctors who are in charge of preserving the body of the late pope and who, since the first day after his death, have checked daily on the body's condition," Panciroli said.

"I am pleased to report that everything was found in order and everything will proceed according to program."

VOTE STILL IN AIR

Municipal Affairs Minister Hugh Curtis has notified the Western Sector Referendum Committee he hasn't made up his mind on allowing a November vote on incorporation of View Royal, Colwood, Langford and Metchosin.

He said he wants more information from his senior officials.

"We just have to take it as gospel that we will be allowed to have a referendum on Nov. 18," committee chairman Howard Drummond said.

The committee already has facts and figures on incorporation, and has arranged meetings Oct. 11 in Colwood, Langford and View Royal.

Curtis last year cancelled a referendum.

7 PANCO FARMS SELL FOR $4M

The provincial government has sold seven of its Panco Poultry farms for just over $4 million, Agriculture Minister Jim Hewitt said Tuesday.

The minister said the highest of 111 bids for 28 tenders were selected with no individual bidder taking more than one farm.

The provincial government now is reviewing bids for broiler farms owned by Panco.

The Social Credit government said last spring it was disposing of the Crown corporation, set up by the former NDP government after it purchased the private company for $5 million.

The present government said it hopes to sell it for $10 million.

Panco produces 35 per cent of the poultry grown in the province and has made a profit since the government purchased it.

The incident occurred at about 10:30 p.m.

Vander Z Bares Fraud

VANCOUVER (CP) — Human Resources Minister Bill Vander Zalm said Tuesday his provincial department has uncovered an illegal operation in which rent receipts are sold to people who use them to obtain assistance at ministry offices in the city.

Vander Zalm said his ministry's investigators are looking into the operation and that charges will be laid. He declined to give further details because the investigation is continuing, he said.

In an address to a service club, the minister said welfare assistance programs sometimes kill a recipient's desire to get out and find a job.

The minister also said that without new Canadians, farmers, hotels and other employers would have a hard time finding workers to do menial jobs which Canadians turn down.

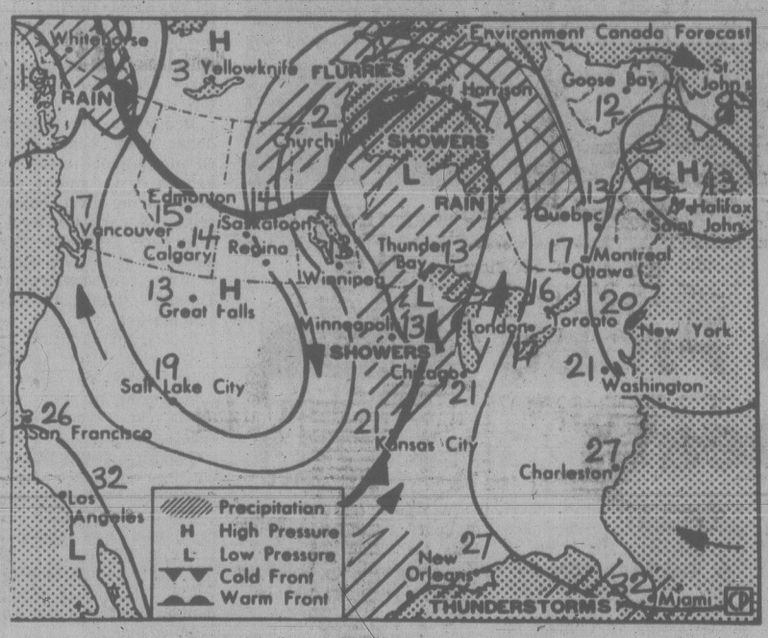
the weather



Map valid until noon Thursday

Dry autumn weather will continue over the southern half of B.C. as a fairly substantial ridge of high pressure maintains its influence. The combination of clear skies and long nights will allow fog to creep in overnight in many areas as well as encourage the appearance of a light frost across much of the interior. A Pacific front pushing across the Gulf of Alaska will spread rain to the northern coast by tonight and will continue inland Thursday, resulting in spotty precipitation in the northern interior.

Greater Victoria: Today and Thursday, sunny with a few early-morning fog patches. Highs both days near 18. Lows tonight around 6.

Greater Vancouver, Lower Mainland, East Vancouver Island: Today and Thursday, mostly sunny except for morning fog patches. Highs both days [illegible]. Lows tonight 5 to 7.

North and West Vancouver Island: Today and Thursday, mostly sunny with patchy morning fog. Highs both days 14 to 17. Lows tonight 4 to 7.

The Invisible Man Turns to Crime. . .

LONDON (AP) — In the discreet world of the super rich, nobody looked twice at Richard Jeakings as he popped in and out of London's opulent art galleries and smart shops carrying an Old Master, a rare print, perhaps an antique Chinese porcelain vase or two under his arm.

No one bothered to say boo to him as he strolled out of the store with a silk Kashmir carpet which 10 minutes earlier had been nailed to the floor of Harrod's rug department.

But the 33-year-old part-time art teacher and painter came to an ignominous end when he was spotted taking liquid dishwashing soap and floor polish without paying for it.

He failed to make his getaway on a bicycle, one of four he used.

Jeakings was sentenced to three years in prison, ordered to pay $3,000 toward the cost of prosecution, and $1,000 toward his legal aid after pleading guilty Tuesday to 23 offences of theft in central London from May 31, 1975, to last Jan. 24 when his spree came to an end.

"I walked into some of those places and out again with the most incredible things and the assistants never saw me," Jeakings told Britain's domestic news agency, the Press Association. "At times—and I know this sounds strange — I felt invisible. The invisible man."

Among the stolen items were:

—A William Blake watercolor stolen from an Old Bond Street gallery.

—Original etchings by Albrecht Durer, James Whistler, Graham Sutherland and David Hockney.

—A Picasso print.

—Prints by Henry Moore, Whistler and Augustus John.

—Three porcelain Minton plaques, a Minton flask and a Minton vase.

Jeakings told detectives he carried away the stolen items on his bicycle, chiding them by adding: "And when did you last stop a man on a bike to see if he was carrying any stolen goods?"

U.S. Fishermen Win B.C. Support

VANCOUVER (CP) — Representatives of British Columbia fishermen said Tuesday they support a court protest initiated by United States fishermen demanding that U.S. treaty Indians be forced to comply with fishing closures imposed by the International Salmon fisheries Commission.

"It's bloody madness the way the (U.S.) Bureau of Indian Affairs is intervening in the jurisdiction of the commission," said Jack Nichol, president of B.C.'s United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union.

As a result, he said, U.S. treaty Indians are allowed to work the pink and sockeye salmon runs at times the ISFC has closed waters in the Strait of Juan de Fuca and in north Puget Sound covered by the U.S.-Canada convention to non-Indians.

Nichol said there is suspicion among B.C. fishermen that the Indian catch is not accurately recorded, with unknown amounts being used for their own food needs or sold directly to the public.

This would work to the eventual disadvantage of Canadian fishermen who are strictly regulated, under the ISFC, to catching no more than an equal amount of pinks and sockeyes in convention waters than the Americans, he said.

The controversy arose as a result of a 1974 U.S. Federal Court ruling in which Judge George Boldt interpreted an early treaty with U.S. Indians to mean that the Indians are entitled to 50 per cent of the total U.S. commercial catch in convention waters.

This differs from Canadian treaties with its natives, which do not give Indians any special rights in commercial fishing, but allow them to harvest enough fish for their own food requirements. This catch is not included in ISFC totals.

U.S. commercial fishermen were so angry last year, said Nichol, they threatened to defy ISFC closures and fish along with the Indians.

"And if they had done that, we would have gone out, too," he said. "After all, those are Canadian fish and we're not going to stand by while others are scooping up our share."

As it now is, he said, the ISFC closes down Canadian fishing while U.S. treaty Indians, poised off Point Roberts, catch the Fraser River-bound fish.

New Washington Flip-Flop: Smith and Co. Get Visas

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Carter administration decided today to issue visas to Rhodesian Prime Minister Ian Smith and his three black colleagues on Rhodesia's governing executive council, informed sources said.

The decision follows a two week tug-of-war within the administration over whether to grant U.S. visas to the leaders of a regime which the United Nations regards as illegal.

The informants said Smith and Rev. Ndabaningi Sithole probably will fly to New York on Saturday and then come to Washington early next week. The other two black members of the Rhodesian leadership will come at a later date.

Smith and his colleagues applied for visas last month after they were invited to come to the United States by 27 conservative senators led by Senator S. I. Hayakawa (Rep. Calif.).

The administration had delayed a final decision on the U.S. visa applications from Rhodesia's new bi-racial leadership while it examined the possibility of convening an all-parties conference, U.S. officials said earlier.

The administration has been reluctant to grant Smith unconditional access to the United States, citing United Nations sanctions against Rhodesia as well as the possibility of an angry reaction from black African nations.

Officials say the state department is exploring the idea of allowing Smith and his allies to come if his opponents agree to join him here to try to work out their differences.

The United States has been sounding out other black-ruled countries in southern Africa on the idea, officials said.

These nations have some influence over Smith's black nationalist rivals, Joshua Nkomo and Robert Mugabe, co-leaders of the Patriotic Front guerrilla group.

It is not clear what the state department will do about the visa applications if the all-parties conference proposal is not successful.

Rapists, Lions Plagued Girl On Solo Trek

SEATTLE (AP) — During Kady Joost's solo trek along the 4,000-kilometre (2,500-mile) Pacific Crest Trail she has fought off robbers and would-be rapists, challenged snow slides and mountain lions, injured her back, and found contentment.

"There was so much peace and contentment in the wilderness," said the 22-year-old woman, resting in Seattle before completing her Mexico-to-Canada wilderness journey.

After six months of training, she and her two horses — one to ride and one for equipment — began the trek in mid-May in Tecate, Mexico.

"Whenever I got afraid, I'd just start writing in my diary. It calmed me," said Ms. Joost.

There was plenty to write.

While camping in the Colorado desert, her fuel and water bottles were stolen. Her horses ended up with cactus spikes in their flesh after a sandstorm and she shot the packhorse after it slipped and fell down a cliff in the snowy San Jacinto Mountains west of Palm Springs, Calif.

She slipped on the same cliff, injuring her back. After a helicopter rescued her the next day, she spent a week in the hospital.

Because she wanted to make the trip "really worthwhile," Ms. Joost had offered to make it as a charity ride to benefit the Greenpeace Foundation, an activist environmental group. Almost $50,000 has been pledged.

A California man who read about her plight in the newspaper donated another horse and she continued the trip. But at the California-Oregon border, two loggers misunderstood her overtures on behalf of Greenpeace and tried to rape her.

"I finally had to shoot their front tires out so I could get away," she said.

After reinjuring her back near Eugene, Ore., she continued the trip in a horse cart, following the main roads to Seattle.

She plans to continue to Vancouver, on Thursday and finish the Crest Trail to Manning "when I'm in better shape."

Conflict of Interest

(The subject of this editorial is the possibility of a conflict of interest in Saanich municipality involving the law firm of Pearlman and Lindholm and one of its indirect employees, Ald. David Paterson. At this point we believe it is important to tell our readers that Pearlman and Lindholm are also the corporate solicitors of Victoria Press and hence, this newspaper. However, we also make it clear that no member of Pearlman and Lindholm has been consulted on anything published in the Times concerning this matter.)

Although all politicians would undoubtedly like it to be, conflict of interest is not an area where things are all black or all white. Perhaps that is one reason why few provinces or municipalities have been able to institute clear conflict of interest laws.

It is certainly easy to imagine cases where someone involved would be clearly on the black side of the line — an official who owns land secretly votes in favor of a zoning change for it, an alderman helps get quick or cheap city services for a parcel of land owned by one of his relatives.

But between those blatant examples and the usual all-white case where the official knows nothing about a decision he is to make except the proper background information put before all council members, there is a huge misty grey area. In that area, a mayor, alderman or other decision-maker has some indirect financial connection with someone who will be significantly affected by the decision to be made. The question is: at what point does the indirect connection hit close enough to home to be considered an actual conflict of interest?

It is in this grey area that Saanich finds itself with the two questions that are being raised over the possible conflicts involving the exceedingly controversial Minnie Mountain development.

The first question involves Ald. David Paterson, an accountant by profession. The case against Paterson is that he works for a management firm that is employed by Pearlman and Lindholm as its managers and that, in fact, most of his work is for the law firm. At the same time Pearlman and Lindholm are the lawyers for R and M Development Company, a principal in which is Gordon Rolston, who is also a principal in Broadmead Farms, the developer of Minnie Mountain. It is clear from the records that the two companies are fairly closely connected.

The second question in the complicated issue is that Pearlman and Lindholm are also the lawyers for Saanich municipality itself.

Ald. John Mika, who has been pursuing the issue tenaciously, is apparently convinced that these relationships bring the incident onto the black side of the ledger. It is his view that the Rolston-Broadmead-R and M group could punish or reward Pearlman and Lindholm financially (presumably by taking its business somewhere else or, alternatively, by increasing its business with the firm) on the basis of the end result of the Minnie Mountain negotiations. This, Mika argues, means that the situation fills the essential definition of a conflict of interest.

Paterson, in his own defence, argues that the connections are far too tenuous to amount to a conflict. Nearly every alderman could be accused of conflict on some issue or other if such a broad definition of conflict were to be adopted, he says, because nearly every alderman's financial position could conceivably be indirectly affected by some council decision. For example, he says, Mayor Mel Couvelier, who runs a men's clothing store, could be indirectly affected by any shopping centre proposal which might eventually contain a store that would be competition to his.

It is our position that the situation is neither as black as Mika would have us think nor as white as Paterson would have us believe. Although a chain can be forged from Paterson to Broadmead, it is a long and twisting one with a number of links required to make the connection. It seems quite clear that there is absolutely no intention on the part of Paterson or anyone else to do anything that is not both strictly moral and legal.

At the same time, the chain is not nearly so tenuous as the hypothetical example Paterson poses concerning the mayor. The connections are undoubtedly real, albeit indirect; they do not depend entirely on events that might happen in the future.

Council has probably taken the best possible action in agreeing to obtain a detailed, independent legal opinion on the whole matter. A report from a neutral, respected lawyer may go far towards defining, not just for Saanich but for all B.C., the point at which conflict of interest begins.

The report will help ease the unpleasant hostilities in Saanich, however, only if the entire council, but especially Mika and Paterson, are willing to accept its findings in a spirit of good grace, not one of competition, revenge or vindictiveness — attitudes that have been seen in Saanich far too often recently.

Dirty Work

The Liberal party traditionally has been the beneficiary of the so-called ethnic vote in Canada. The millions of Europeans and Asians who emigrated to this country before the First World War and after the second — under Grit governments, mainly — have not been ungrateful with their votes.

But longtime Liberal Bryce Mackasey, seeking election to the House of Commons in the Ottawa-Centre byelection two weeks from now is certainly going about it in an odd fashion.

"This is not a country of two cultures and two languages," he told his nominating convention. "This is a country of many cultures and many languages, two of which have special significance.

"Where would we be without the Italians and the Ukrainians, and the Portuguese, the Greeks and the Lebanese? Who would do the dirty work? And dig the subways, and mine the mines? And sweep the floors?"

And who shall represent Ottawa-Centre after Oct. 16? Not Mackasey, it seems, if the Italian, Greek, Ukrainian, Lebanese and Portuguese floor-sweepers, miners and subway workers have much to say about it.

RICHARD GWYN

It's Free Trade by Default

The third option would lessen the vulnerability of the Canadian economy to external factors, in particular the impact of the U.S., and . . . develop a more confident sense of national identity.
External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp, October, 1972

OTTAWA — Officially, no one talks any more about the third option policy of trying — by a trip to Cuba, by the famous, invisible "contractual links" with Europe — to prevent our north-south ties from binding us too closely.

Unofficially, the third option has been dead for a couple of years. Prime Minister Trudeau now goes to Washington to address congress and to New York to sweettalk the Economic Club rather than to Cuba to praise Castro. The obituary for the third option was written in 1976 by the U.S. financial weekly, Barrons: "The only American business that wouldn't be welcomed in Canada would be Murder Inc."

Almost in Bed

What then about the second option? It meant, said Sharp, "closer integration with the U.S." No, no, no, said Sharp, in 1972. Cuddling up to the U.S. would "threaten the Canadian identity."

Today, without admitting and without perhaps even realizing it, we are curled up at the foot of the U.S. bed. Two examples of the change in attitude.

In 1975, the Economic Council of Canada report Looking Outward suggested, timidly and circuitously, Canada-U.S. free trade as a last choice alternative to all other forms of free trade. In reply came a storm of editorial and political protest that almost flattened the council.

Two months ago, the Senate committee on foreign affairs recommended that Canadians "seriously examine" North American free trade. The Toronto Star excepted, scarcely an editorial voice has squeaked. "The silence has amazed me," says committee chairman Senator George van Roggen.

Again, late in August, "after two years of pondering about it and wondering whether I should do it," Carl Beigie, director of the C. D. Howe research institute, broke a long silence and called for a "Canada-U.S. economic deal" based upon free trade. To him, Beigie's agonized conversion earned him the same response as the report of the Senate committee — none at all.

Continentalism, once the most potent issue in Canadian politics except for that of national unity, has become, it seems, conventional wisdom.

Economics isn't the only force pushing us together. The U.S. no longer repels Canadians as it did when it was at war in Vietnam and when its own cities were battlegrounds. More than three million Canadians a year now depend upon the U.S. as a winter resting place, whether for a few days or permanently. If our magazines have never before been so Canadian, our television, which is the only cultural force that really matters, has never been so Americanized — without public protests any more.

Yet economics is still the force that counts. In a chilly world, Canadians are finding themselves shivering alone — the only industrial country, almost, without free access to a market of 100 million or more.

Bleakly, the Senate committee listed the alternatives to Canada-U.S. free trade: "de-industrialization," as U.S. branch plants hurry back home; "diminished competitiveness," as Canada struggles to implement an industrial strategy without a market within which to implement it; and, as the end result, "a declining standard of living."

The price of economic expansion, continentalist critics always have argued, would be political contraction. The Senate committee disagreed: "An economically strong Canada is in a much better situation to maintain political and cultural independence than an economically weak Canada."

Unconfident People

There's the rub. The second option is familiar. It amounts, though its advocates haven't realized it, to the Parti Quebecois' formula for "political sovereignty-economic association," with the U.S. in place of Canada, and Canada in place of Quebec. If Canada could negotiate a free trade for sovereignty deal with the U.S., so could Quebec with Canada, more easily so in fact because the partners would be more equal in size.

To push the analysis a step further, if Canada did indeed initiate free trade discussions with the U.S., Quebec would be far better able to protect its own interests as an independent country than as a member of a federation that was due, soon, to cease to exist as a distinct common market. By extension, so would Canada's western and eastern provinces.

The Senate committee, wisely, did not advocate free trade as such but only that it be examined seriously, "without prejudice." It's economic appeal remains as strong as ever, perhaps stronger than ever. It's political appeal has never been weaker, which may only be a measure of how unconfident our national identity now is.

Bonnie Fighter

During my absence recently from the city, my dear friend Maurice Percival Bentley Wrixon passed away.

Our differences of opinion did not prevent me recognizing the sterling quality, the rare vintage of a gentleman, alas whose like we will not see too often again. In personal letters (we never met) we were able before his death to make known our mutual respect and our agreement on the principle of our life, hope and striving for the betterment of humanity.

As it was given to me to say the last word, I say with sadness in my heart: Hail and farewell, I will miss you my good friend and bonnie fighter and I pray God in His infinite mercy give you eternal rest. — M. P. Paine, 3620 Quadra Street.

Downtown Houston is not most Victorians' idea of a beautiful city.

Hands Off, Please

Victoria Real Estate Board president Bev Highton (Realtors Urge Open Zoning; Times, Sept.26) is probably correct in saying that "all development should be tied to the question of need" — the question is, of course, who decides that need?

I assume from his comments that Mr. Highton feels that such a decision is rightfully that of the developer, after all, what's more important than making money?

It's long past time that developers, whose sole interest is profit — why else are they in business? — and all levels of government understood that private homeowners who for the most part have their life's earnings and efforts invested in the home of their choice and in an environment of their choice, are the ones who should be deciding the future of their city or municipality.

On the assumption that the old adage "you can't get a quart in a pint pot" still prevails and with the pitiful examples of overdeveloped cities all around us, I suggest Mr. Highton take his board to undeveloped areas and try their luck there.

The city of Houston may indeed be no better or no worse than any other city in North America in terms of development, but who decided that Houston is the yardstick against which areas in Victoria and B.C. are to be measured?

As to his concern that some people may have to drive five miles to a service station — always assuming they do not pass one on their day-to-day movements — has it not occurred to Mr. Highton that perhaps that is their choice as being part of the business of getting away from the rat race? For my own part, I'd far sooner live in that situation than have a 15-storey apartment in my backyard with 200 windows gazing down and me left wondering whether the sun is up or down!

This private citizen does not require the assistance of developers or any government official to decide the environment in which I chose to live. Like many others I chose Oak Bay, people in Saanich chose Saanich and so on, and I object in the strongest possible terms to private business adventurers putting their money-grubbing fingers on my way of life. — A.J. Broome, 2275 Dunlevy Street.

A Soupy Plot

Once upon a time, in an English-speaking community, the merchants displayed their products in English. (This sounds like the commencement of a Hans Andersen fairy tale, but it is true, nevertheless.

Take Campbell's soup, for instance (made in Toronto). The cans are printed in French and English — but the French is above the English. Recently, the English is almost obscured by the French, and, in fact, some of the merchants carefully cut the cartons so that the English is covered up. (If you don't believe me, check the Safeway Store).

This is an insidious method of attempting to have the public learn French. I have no objection to learning to speak French, so long as I am in France or Quebec, but in any other province I resent any overt act which means a discomfort for me, such as removing the can to read the English title, or tearing the carton.

Therefore, I suggest that Campbell's soup be boycotted, until they learn to put the English above the French so that is can be plainly read. — E.P. Roberts, 3471 Veteran Street.

No Right

Whatever may have been achieved at the Camp David meeting between presidents Carter and Sadat and Menachem Begin, there can be no real progress without the participation of the Palestine Liberation Organization. Neither President Sadat, President Assad or even King Hussein of Jordan or, indeed, any other Arab leader can speak for the Arabs of Palestine. Only the PLO as represented by its chairman, Yasser Arafat, can do this and it seems that they are being ignored completely despite the fact that the Palestinian Arabs are the main party, as well as being the main sufferers, in the Middle East crisis.

Ever since the Holy Land was liberated from the Turks in 1917, the Palestinian Arabs (who constituted 93 per cent of the population of that country in 1917 and 70 per cent in 1947) have been treated callously and cynically as a people of secondary importance, and these transplanted aliens, the Zionists, regarded as the people of prime importance in that area. The Zionist state known as Israel was created, not in agreement with the Arab majority, but very much against the latter's will, and by armed force!

Israel is therefore a bogus state with no legal or moral right to exist as such, although this does not mean that Jews, either as individuals or as communities, have no right to live in Palestine. They have such a right provided that there is sufficient room for them and that they are willing to live at peace as good Palestinians alongside their Arab brothers, but this right does not include the setting up of a separate state within that country, especially a state built on racial and/or religious exclusiveness.

The Zionists, having expelled the vast majority of the Arab population from what is now Israel by armed force, have repeatedly refused to allow them back to their homes and property and none of the great powers, especially the United States, have insisted that they do so allow them back, which is only common justice. The Zionists' seizure of Palestine is regarded as a fait accompli. Hitler's seizure of Europe was also a fait accompli, but he was not allowed to get away with it! Why, then, should the Zionists be allowed to hang on to their ill-gotten gains?

If peace in that strategic area of the world is to be achieved, then it is very necessary to get rough with the Zionists and tell them exactly where to get off! The peace of the world, let alone the Middle East, may well depend upon this, and surely world peace is of far greater importance than the existence of a bogus state which never should have been created in the first place. — Richard D. Corrance, 710 Cormorant Street.

Standing in Line

Unemployment in this city and all B.C. deserves a little more brotherhood and justice. The phone number of the Unemployment Insurance office (388-3321) rings busy daily for four hours straight, and if lucky you may get through then.

There is a three- to four-hour waiting period at the office, there are no toilets, no coffee urns there. Wednesday at the Bay Street armory many came early and waited, only to find no cheque and in stunned silence returned to the unemployment office to stand and wait in line again.

Where are the politicians now? Where are the big labor leaders? One hundred thousand people out in B.C. Never mind the "smile button" blarney; spend the thousands to help these families and their children.

Blessed are the strong and healthy who lighten the load of the weak and burdened. — Anne V. Sherbrook, 1919 Davie Street.

PEOPLE OF THE LAKE

By RICHARD E. LEAKEY and ROGER LEWIN

The ability to communicate through spoken language and body gestures sets mankind apart from the rest of the animal kingdom. When humans first evolved into rational creatures, they tried to better relate to their environment through language. Today, we continue to pursue this same goal. Understanding the ancient origins of human language makes us better able to comprehend human forms of communication today, as best-selling authors Richard Leakey and Roger Lewin explain in this fourth of a seven-part series from their new book, People of the Lake: Mankind and Its Beginnings.

The Origins of Language

Human possession of a rational soul carves out an unbreachable chasm between us and other animals.

The principal feature of our rationality is a language, the faculty of arranging together different words, and composing a discourse from them.

The question we have to pursue is, Why? Why is it that during the evolutionary journey from a speechless ape-like ancestor we learned the trick of stringing together complex sounds in a meaningful way?

Perhaps the pressures of natural selection planted in the heads of primitive Homo the ability for spoken language, not so that one individual could tell another what he should be doing next in the practical matters of daily life, but so that everyone could think more effectively about the world in which they made a living. The complex operation of an advanced gathering-and-hunting economy would be impossible without a series of social rules that could be elaborated and transmitted only through the medium of the spoken word.

To the "Why?" question of language we have to add "When?" Did the birth of spoken language have to await the arrival of Homo erectus around 1.5 million years ago? Maybe real language is a relative infant in the psychological evolution of humankind, arriving on the scene perhaps a mere 50 millenia ago as the last ingredient of modern Homo sapiens?

If we had to rely on direct evidence sketched on the path to modern man, then we would have to conclude that words were invented just a few millenia ago: the earliest examples of recognizable writing appear about five thousand years ago with the Sumerian civilization. No one, however, would argue that human language has so short a career. And yet, apart from writing, there can be no other direct record of this essentially ephemeral product of the human mind.

'Why' may never be known

That spoken human language did emerge from the melting pot of hominid evolution is unquestionable. But, because of its nature, why or when it arose must remain forever the secret of times past. But the inexorable nature of human intellectual curiosity is such that we are bound to continue asking the questions.

Undoubtedly, a complex of evolutionary pressures must have conspired to put words into the mouths of our ancestors, but almost certainly one of them was the advantage of being able to create better pictures in their heads. The ability to see commonalities between objects of the same type — classes such as trees, fruit, predators, birds, etc. — is a crucial step in creating conceptual order in what otherwise might be an overwhelming perceptual chaos.

Creating and mentally manipulating images is a way of exploring your environment from the perspective of experience, and the sharper those images are in your head, the more effective you will be in exploiting that environment. Words — arbitrary sounds that name specific objects or events — are superb tools for sharpening and manipulating images in one's own head, and for invoking them in someone else's: book, storm clouds, black stallion, beautiful woman, handsome man, war — all these words may pluck images from your mind, images admittedly that differ from person to person, because of both the diversity of the world and the diversity of individual experience.

Words are powerful instruments for telling stories. They are less spectacular for giving instructions. We are not suggesting that the evolutionary force of needing to sit around spinning enthralling stories to captivated audiences was great enough by itself to upgrade a basic piece of mental circuitry into a fully operating language-producing machine. But who would deny that the facility to share experience — to create a genuine shared consciousness — would be evolutionarily advantageous to creatures whose unusual subsistence economy forced them into a uniquely intense social contract?

Our early Homo ancestors grew up and lived in bands in which individuals depended on each other for survival more acutely than any other primate ever experiences. Because of their mixed economy of gathering and hunting and subsequent food sharing, our Homo ancestors did need each other for economic reasons, and this tied the social and emotional knots even tighter. Sharing experience within the co-operating band through the medium of evocative language must have been an essential ingredient in the increasingly rich social mix.

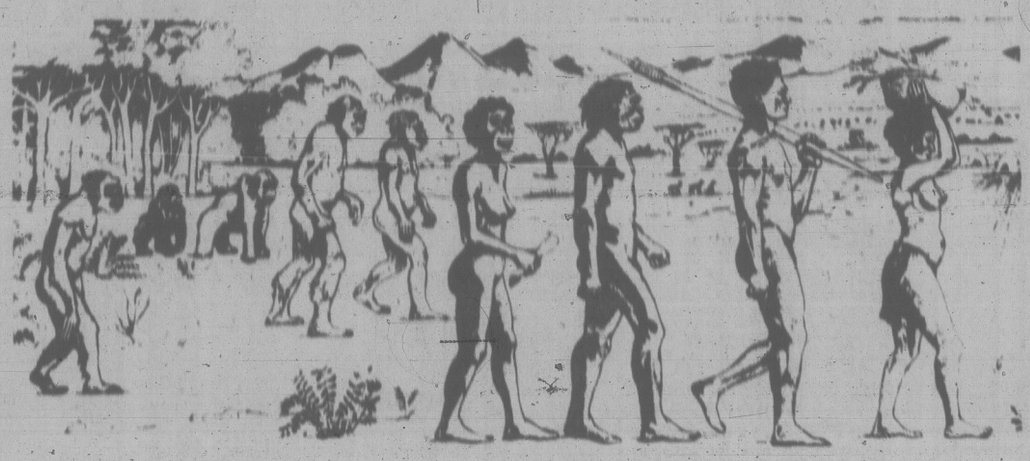
Without a commitment to social order, without loyalty to the band, an individual in a gathering-and-hunting group would perish and co-operative activity would be impossible. Throughout human evolution there must have been strong selective pressures for social conformity, and the structure within which people operated was provided by group culture: that culture would be impossible without a language with which to construct it.

As the sound uttered by our distant ancestors left no tangible trace in the archaeological record, how do we look for signs of emerging language in our past?

One must first reflect only for a moment on any normal conversation between two people, or perhaps imagine the performance of a powerful orator, to glimpse the most obvious element of human dialogue: nonverbal communication, particularly gestures.

Facial expression, inflection in the voice, gestures of the hands and arms — all play an enormous part in human communication. This channel of communication is, of course, the only one open to the non-verbal animal world. One inevitably ponders on the possible role of elaborate gestures in hominids' early excursions into more sophisticated communication and symbolizing. If modern apes can learn symbolic signs and use them in a structured way, Pliocene hominids (between five and two million years ago) with their more humanly organized brains could also have been able to invent their own sign language.

Gesture language, combined with expressive vocalizations and facial movements, may well have been hominid evolution's "first attempt" at breaking through the communications barrier, only to be supplanted later by a vocal language with its infinitely greater capacity for handling information. Possibly the development of more expressive gestures and vocalizations (leading to spoken language) began simultaneously, with the spoken word proving the more powerful.



It would be difficult to refute the idea that meaningful gestures have been an important component of human communication for a very long time. We all gesture to some degree when we speak — particularly so when we are stuck for words! And the universality of many types of gestures and facial expressions throughout the world argues that manual signing as a means of communication is deeply planted in the human brain. What we now experience in ourselves, and see in others, must be the remnants of an ancient means of communication of some sort, but whether it was a forerunner of spoken language, or a concomitant of it, is impossible to say.

When we skim through the pages of the archaeological record, the evidence of human communication grows steadily more numerous as we move toward the present, and begins to include non-utilitarian objects: carved figures, pendants, and paintings.

Three hundred thousand years ago, a time when our ancestors were in transition between Homo erectus and primitive Homo sapiens, someone sat with an ox rib and carved on it a series of festooned double arches. Why, we don't know, but the pattern is exactly the same as that enscribed commonly throughout the period forty thousand to fifteen thousand years ago.

After the carved ox rib there is a gaping void in the archaeological record until more carved objects appear, such as a shaped mammoth molar tooth worked on by a prehistoric craftsman fifty thousand years ago at a place called Tata in Hungary. We don't imagine that our ancestors gave up converting their symbolism into tangible form during that enormous gap; there must be countless examples of ancient carving just waiting to be found.

Signs of repeated use

One of the earliest examples of "art" is a two-inch-long statue of a horse carved from mammoth ivory more than thirty-two thousand years ago. It comes from a cave at Vogelherd in south Germany and it is the oldest of several statuettes from the same sites. Produced with an artistic skill equal to that of the high point of cave painting in Europe and Africa twenty thousand years later, the horse had been carried around in a pouch and handled over a period of several years: the eye, ear, nose, mouth, and mane, which had clearly been carefully carved, were worn down by its prolonged handling. In fact, all the Vogelherd statuettes revealed the same telltale signs of repeated use; they don't appear to have been ornaments of self-decoration, but they may have been personal "good luck" charms constantly fingered absent-mindedly during daily chores; or perhaps they figured in repeated social ceremonies.

Whatever the specific use of these carvings and paintings, they speak to us of a truly human spirit that we all recognize in ourselves. We may not be the only animal who intentionally makes tools, but we are the only creature who sets out to manufacture strictly non-utilitarian objects. It is the mark of a fully maturing culture.

What has this to do with language? Although it is just about conceivable to imagine complex stone-tool cultures being manufactured by nonverbal creatures, it is impossible that abstract symbolism, such as we see elaborated during the past thirty thousand years, could arise in a speechless animal.

Without words with which to name them, a statuette of a horse, a rock painting, or a nation's flag, could never exist; they would be meaningless.

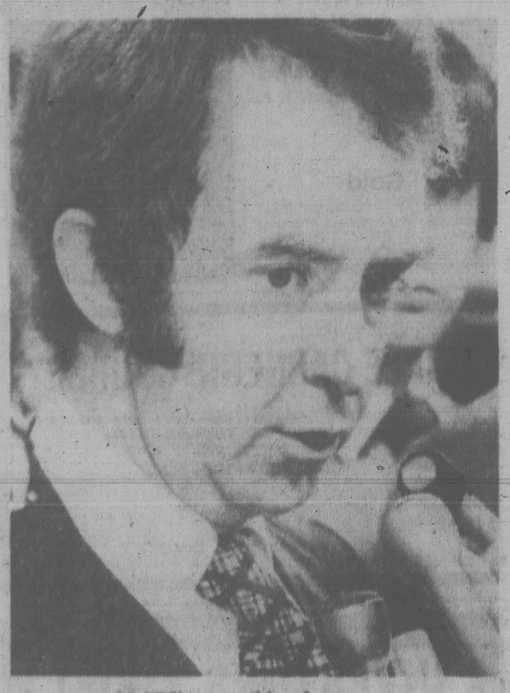
Tory Mortgage Plan More Help for Rich



CLARK . . . nothing for tenants

By LEONARD SHIFRIN

OTTAWA — Joe Clark thinks what Canada needs is a $1.6 billion income redistribution program that will give 75 per cent of its benefits to the highest-income 15 per cent of taxpayers.

As Talleyrand put it in response to an 18th century proposal of similar merit: "What you propose, sir, is immoral; but what's worse, it's dumb".

Clark proposes to engineer his giveaway scheme through the Income Tax Act, offering a deduction of up to $5,000 for mortgage interest and $1,000 for property tax. The result, he contends, will be a "major stimulant" for Canada's house-building industry.

Pointing to the fact that such deductions are a part of the U.S. tax system, Clark declared that the American experience proves that they work.

But whatever it is that the U.S. experience proves, it certainly isn't that.

Since there is no significant difference between home-ownership rates in the U.S. and Canada, to argue that the U.S. rate was stimulated by such provisions is to insist — based on absolutely nothing — that it would otherwise have lagged behind.

The U.S. experience does show, however, that a mortgage interest deduction will cause homeowners to continually refinance their homes, maintaining large mortgages for the tax advantage, and thus force up interest rates.

It also shows that shielding high-income taxpayers from most of the impact of property tax leads to more and more of the tax load being shifted to that form of tax — until a Proposition-13-style revolt is provoked.

The most incongruous result of Proposition 13 was that, while California municipalities lost $7 billion in property tax revenues, Washington gained $2 billion in income tax from Californians who suddenly found their deductions reduced. Those in top brackets were being reimbursed as much as 80 per cent of their property tax by way of income tax savings.

According to U.S. Treasury Department figures, in 1977 the highest-income 15 per cent of American taxpayers derived 75 per cent of the benefits from mortgage interest and property tax deductibility.

If that is what Joe Clark has in mind, then . . . yes, it works.

Tenants get nothing. Senior citizens with their homes already paid for get nothing from the mortgage deduction and, unless their retirement incomes are high enough to put them over the income tax threshold, get none of their property taxes rebated either.

A middle-income taxpayer with a modest home gets a couple of hundred dollars, and someone in the top tax bracket qualifies for a windfall of almost $4,000. (That's right. A $6,000 deduction is worth almost $4,000 in tax savings to someone in the top tax bracket.)

Tax relief aimed at shelter costs doesn't have to be done that way.

In fact, it is ironic that Clark picked Toronto as the scene for unveiling his proposals, because the Conservative government at Queen's Park is one of several provincial administrations which have instituted such measures on a progressive basis.

The Ontario tax credit applies equally to renters as homeowners, is reduced as income rises, and is refundable to those below the income tax threshold.

According to figures published by the Ontario government last year, the lowest-income 35 per cent of the province's tax-filers receive 45 per cent of the benefits from the program, while the highest-income 10 per cent receive only 4 per cent of the gains.

A similar program could easily be introduced at the federal level. In fact, a blueprint for it already exists.

The interdepartmental committee on tax and transfers integration, which reported to cabinet last year, outlined a whole set of refundable tax credit approaches which could be employed in place of tax exemptions and transfer payments of various sorts.

If the Liberals decide to tackle the Tories on the mockery they would make of equity if they ever got to form a government, proposing an Ontario-style credit as the alternative to Clark's U.S.-inspired brainstorm would be an obvious place to start.

The Signs Of Bad Taste

katharine whitehorn

Since my name is not Yoko Lethargy, I am not unduly envious of people who can buy Yves Saint Laurent head-scarves, I am only sorry that no one called Kettering Elijah Whittleshank has yet gone into the medium-priced handbag business, since KEW are my initials and the only ones I want on my belongings.

But others, apparently, don't feel this way at all. Businessmen who used, smirking self-consciously, to have their own initials embroidered on their shirts would nowadays prefer something that indicates that the shirt belongs to Pierre Cardin.

Harrods, which likes to think of itself as London's classiest store, actually sells tote bags with the word Harrods on them, so someone must think them as valuable as a souvenir of the Eiffel Tower (though in fact it is worth buying something in one of their regular plastic carriers — their opaque green keeps the light off washed potatoes and so stops them going mouldy).

Swank shops in all our big cities are bursting with objects carrying the maker's initial — so much so, in fact, that half of them mean absolutely nothing to the uninitiated; and the clear-eyed, un-status-conscious young are just as bad with the name-tags on their jeans.

What on earth makes people want to carry other people's advertising around on themselves in this way? I once heard an expert say that "the little mark on your shirt which shows you paid twice as much for it as you need have done" is there to forestall criticism.

You don't have to ask whether or not the shirt is a ghastly color so long as it's plainly Jaeger; if it's recognizably the Charles Eames chair no one is going to ask whether it's actually comfortable to sit on (it isn't). The great pity of it is that no one has yet figured out a way of stopping people noticing what you really smell like by rushing at them with a box marked Lanvin.

The economics of it is simple enough: The great design names make far more selling their brand names to people who want to print their initials on boxes and wallets and trousers than they ever do actually designing anything — though the more it goes on, of course, the less guarantee there is that the master's own hand ever drew so much as a squiggle on a scrap paper.

But the "security" of a brand name actually indicates the exact opposite. Isn't it the girl who has real confidence in her bottom who would dare to cut off the Levi or Jeanius or Wrangler mark? Did 18th-century dukes insist that Chippendale put a big "C" on his chairs to show the doubting that they really came out of his workshops?

If people really knew how to tell a beautiful glass from an ugly one, would people ever leave the stickers on as they do? (One firm actually provides stickers that can be stuck back on the glassware once it's been through the dishwasher).

Of course not — it's a mark that you don't trust your own taste that you carry these signs around.

Me, I'm prepared to take a stand on everything with K on it except K Shoes, which don't suit me; or the glass bottle that my children gave me with "M" for Mummy on it (just like Beth embroidering "M" for Marmee in Little Women).

And if I ever find anyone called Henry Isambard Silas I shall not rest till I've rustled up another caled Harold Ezekial Rastus Smith and brought them together. The way things are going, they'll soon be the only guys in the world prepared to make HIS and HERS bath-towels.

Seagram

Seagram Co. Ltd. reported a net income of $90,564,000, or $2.58 a share, for the fiscal year ended July 31, 1978, compared with $87,073,000, or $2.48 a share, for the previous year.

The company, which is the world's largest producer of distilled spiris and wines, also reported that sales and other income totalled $2.273 billion for the 1977-78 fiscal year.

Company chairman Edgar Bronfman said growth in the worldwide demand for Scotch whiskey and "substantially improved earnings" from international operations helped the company score record sales and income this year.

Taylor said the money will be used for work to be done in Alberta and British Columbia this year.

B.C.-Built Czech Mill Go-Ahead

OTTAWA (CP) — Financial arrangements to enable a Vancouver company to build a $300 million pulp mill in Czechoslovakia were completed Tuesday, the Export Development Corp announced.

John MacDonald, president of the Crown corporation which promotes export sales, said the contract will generate 10,000 man-years of work for Canadians.

The project, the expansion of a mill and paper company in northern Czechoslovakia for the government of that country, was first made public last week by External Affairs Minister Don Jamieson during a four-day visit to the United Nations.

The Export Development Corp. will provide a loan of $218 million U.S. to H.A. Simons (Overseas) Ltd., the company in charge of the project.

An additional $80-million loan will be provided by a consortium of Canadian banks, led by the Bank of Montreal. The other members are the Toronto Dominion Bank, the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, the Royal Bank of Canada and the Bank of Nova Scotia.

Details of the financing package, made with the Czechoslovakian bank, Ceskoslovenska Obchnodni Banka A.S., could not be concluded until today, although the project had been under negotiation for some time.

H.A. Simons Ltd. will provide engineering, equipment and project management. The company expects to use 16 other Canadian firms as major suppliers and an additional 60 smaller suppliers.

MacDonald said: "We are confident that this project is the forerunner of many more orders of this nature and, we hope, of this importance."

Industry Minister Jack Horner said the contract will promote Western Canada as a source of expertise in engineering.

Torstar Group Blocks Western Broadcast Plan

VANCOUVER (CP) — Western Broadcasting, the Vancouver-based company with interests in radio, television and hockey, is facing a dilemma.

Western wants to expand, but its plans are being thwarted by Torstar Corp. of Toronto, the holding company which owns Toronto Star, Canada's largest daily newspaper, and 33 per cent of Western's stock.

Torstar wants a place on Western's board, but Western's directors say that's not possible.

They interpret the request as proof that Torstar wants to be more than just a passive shareholder of Western. A situation where a newspaper would participate in broadcast policy is something neither it nor the communications authorities would ever accept, Western says.

The upshot is a stalemate or, says Western chairman Frank Griffiths, a "Mexican stand-off."

Western's board met in August needing shareholder approval for reorganizing its capital, a necessary step toward merging with Premier Cablevision Ltd.

Premier operates cablevision in Vancouver and has cable systems in much of the Greater Vancouver area, on Vancouver Island and in Ontario.

Western's plan was the latest in a series of efforts in which it has tried to take over Premier. It already has a 26 per cent interest in the cablevision company.

Torstar had stated its opposition to the re-organization scheme all along, but Western still made a last-ditch plea to Torstar to change its position during the special meeting of shareholders.

Torstar voted against the plan, saying it had nothing against the merger plans. But the reorganization, as proposed, would have weakened Torstar's position by converting its shares to non-voting ones.

Griffiths said he has no intention of selling. It is not just a matter of keeping an outsider out, he said, because newspapers and broadcasting interests don't mix.

The Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission has indicated the press and electronic media should be separate.

"We have seven radio stations and 54 per cent of a B.C. (BCTV) television company," said Peters. "If you take that and merge it with one of the three largest cable companies (Premier), you have a substantial enterprise.

"If you take all that and then superimpose the biggest newspaper in Canada, it is too much."

Western also owns 65 per cent of Vancouver Canucks of the National Hockey League.

Western officials will wait until February before making their next move. The CRTC has scheduled a hearing into the cross-ownership of communications companies for that month.

Only 18 Mines Left In Province

PRINCE RUPERT (CP) — Bob Matthew, managing director of the Mining Association of British Columbia, reiterated his organization's contention that the mining industry will disappear in B.C. unless the government takes positive action to encourage development.

In a speech here Tuesday, Matthew said seven mines opened in B.C. between 1972 and 1977, but 11 closed.

"This year three more are closing and the total operating mines by the year end will be 18," he said. "Unless we open more mines quickly, B.C.'s second largest resource industry will largely disappear.

"Whatever government is in power must understand that companies and investors are not going to put their money into mining when governments strip away, or threaten to strip away, all or most of the profits."

Matthew said his organization welcomes a public inquiry to be held early next year into provincial mining regulations.

He said the inquiry will provide factual information on an issue "that is being distorted by certain people and organizations in our society."

Gov't Goes Too Far, Say Transit Directors

VANCOUVER (CP) — Directors from the Greater Vancouver Regional District and the Capital Regional District of Victoria held a special public meeting Tuesday to map a joint strategy on transit.

The meeting was the first of its kind held in public.

The directors from both groups said they feel the provincial government has gone too far on its own — dictating a cost-sharing formula which both groups agree will ultimately result in the regional districts having the task of collecting increased property taxes to fund the growing transit deficit.

The meeting approved the establishment of a joint committee with the job of making recommendations on appropriate alternatives to current legislation and alternatives to the urban transit authority's financing method.

STUDY SET FOR OCT. 12

VANCOUVER (CP) — Federal ministry of transport officials will examine proposals for a multi-million-dollar insurance package covering Canada's 37 municipally-operated airports on Oct. 12, a department spokesman said Tuesday.

Steve Rybak said an earlier ministry announcement that the proposals would be examined Tuesday resulted from a misunderstanding in the department.

No Fight Over Pact: IWA

VANCOUVER (CP) — The International Woodworkers of America (IWA) have no intention of turning an agreement aimed at ending a raiding feud with the Canadian Paperworkers Union (CPU) into a new reason for warring, IWA regional president Jack Munro said Tuesday.

He was reacting to CPU regional vice-president Art Gruntman's unhappiness at having the peace treaty made public Monday at the IWA regional convention.

"I don't want to start a god damn scrap over something that's good," Munro said. "The IWA is excited about the agreement and determined to make it work.

"We don't see any harm in reporting to our members what the officers are doing, particularly at a convention. We've had resolution after resolution year after year about this problem."

Gruntman said earlier that the publicity was untimely and might cause problems for him.

The feud dates back to 1969 when the CPU organized sawmill as well as pulpmill workers at Eurocan's Kitimat plant. Then, in 1975, an unsuccessful effort to co-ordinate bargaining added to bad feelings between the two unions.

The agreement, reached with the help of Dennis McDermott, Canadian Labor Congress president, calls for a no-raiding pact, co-ordinated bargaining and eventual merger.

Ex-UBC President Dies at 73

VANCOUVER (CP) — Dr. Walter H. Gage, president of the University of British Columbia (UBC) from 1969 to 1975, died Tuesday of cancer. He was 73.

Gage enrolled at UBC as a freshman in 1921 and after receiving his Bachelor and Master of Arts degrees in mathematics, began his teaching career in 1927 at Victoria College.

He returned to UBC as an assistant professor in 1933 and continued to teach until March of this year. During his years as president, he continued to teach 10 or more hours a week.

Dr. Douglas T. Kenny, who succeeded Gage as president, said Tuesday the province and the nation have lost an important and favorite native son.

"He will be remembered both for his wise counsel and his warm physical presence, which were manifest in his friendly smile and sense of humor, the arm thrown around the shoulder and the pat on the back," Kenny said.

Gage is survived by his mother, Ann Gage, and a sister, Elsie Harvey, both of Vancouver.

Region's Veto Urged On Port

VANCOUVER (CP) — A staff report recommends that the Greater Vancouver Regional District should oppose the expansion of the Roberts Bank superport south of here.

An environmental assessment review panel is to hold a hearing later this month on expansion of the port.

The National Harbors Board has recommended partial expansion of Roberts Bank, based on a consultant's environmental-impact statement commissioned because the board felt the port would need to be expanded before 1980 to meet bulk export predictions.

The study also recommends construction of a new port at Ridley Island, near Prince Rupert.

Regional district staff, however, feel the need for the port is not outlined clearly enough in the consultant's report.

"There is no reason why an expansion of Roberts Bank is required several years in advance of new or proposed coal developments when the construction of a new coal terminal will take only 32 months and the lead time for most coal development is three to five years," the district's report says.

It also says that the potential capacity of Vancouver-area grain terminals is not fixed and can be expanded to meet the need; that forecasts of bulk liquid fuel export are questionable, and the development of the port to export potash is based on speculation.

CARR ART FETCHES $25,000

LONDON (CP) — An Emily Carr watercolor of a Dawson City, Y.T., scene, was bought for $25,500 by Blair-Laing, a Canadian art dealer with offices in Toronto and Vancouver.

The painting by the Victoria artist was signed, inscribed and dated 1929, and went in one of the twice-yearly grab-bag sales at Christie's auction house.

Williams and Son, a London dealer, paid $36,000 for the Cornelius Krieghoff painting Indian Hunter in the Snow at Sunset.

Bennett on Tour, Dropping Gifts, Hints

WILLIAMS LAKE (CP) — Premier Bill Bennett has reiterated his promise to give tax relief to B.C. property owners, but has again refused to spell out exactly what form that relief would take.

In a speech at a civic dinner in this Interior community Tuesday, Bennett warned voters to beware of politicians who try to buy votes by promising a tax revolt.

He then told about 400 people that in its next budget, his government would provide ways to ease the burden on property owners because "the homeowner in this province needs a break."

After the dinner, however, he declined to answer questions on what form that break would take, saying only that home ownership is part of the Social Credit philosophy.

By the time Bennett and his entourage arrived here Tuesday night, they had accumulated a mound of gifts from communities they visited on the first of a five-day tour on the B.C. Railway.

Audrey Bennett, the premier's wife, was given numerous bouquets of flowers and shared with her husband an assortment of cowboy hats, western belts, T-shirts, plaques, books, assorted handicrafts and about 100 pounds of potatoes.

Bennett had some gifts of his own for communities he visited on the first leg of his journey which ends in Fort Nelson, in northeastern B.C., on Saturday.

While in Lillooet, about 250 kilometres northeast of Vancouver, he said a new $5 million bridge will be built over the Fraser River, downstream from a suspension bridge built in 1911 near the Interior community.

He said first tenders will be called next week for the 48-metre bridge, to be completed in two years.

He also announced a $114,000 grant to aid in relocating and redeveloping the local airport.

While most citizens were enthusiastic in greeting the group, which included some cabinet ministers, some took the opportunity to confront Bennett with demands.

The train was stopped by six residents near Squamish, about 95 kilometres north of Vancouver, as they blocked the railway line with a 13-ton logging skidder to complain about a zoning issue.

Bennett promised to look into the matter; the skidder was shifted off the track and the tour continued.

The premier and his cabinet colleagues were approached during a bus ride in Squamish by Mayor Pat Brennan, who used the public address system to put across his community's request for provincial government aid.

Bennett announced the awarding of a $268,000 contract for two bridges in the area.

He also met with a group of Squamish high school students who asked him about Quebec separatism and Premier Rene Levesque.

Bennett said separatism won't work. Quebec won't separate, he said, and Levesque is a good salesman trying to sell a bad product.

The premier said students should be happy living in a province of opportunity and, if it were not for B.C. and Alberta, the Canadian dollar would be worth 37 cents and two soft-drink caps.

He would not predict a winner in the next federal election, but said Canadians want a strong government.

B.C. Man Begins Fraud Fight

VANCOUVER (CP) — Hermann von Pfetten of Vancouver flew back Tuesday to Denver to fight extradition proceedings brought by his native country of West Germany, where allegations of fraud have been made.

He was arrested in Denver earlier this year and later allowed back to his Vancouver home after putting up a $100,000 cash bond pending the appeal.

Von Pfetten, accompanied by his wife, Heidrun, will appear in court Thursday.

His lawyer, John Taylor, plans to leave for Denver today to represent the baron and attempt to have the proceedings transferred to a Canadian court.

Aid Urged For Ailing Dissident

VANCOUVER (CP) — Canadian relatives of a Soviet Union dissident have approached External Affairs Minister Don Jamieson to help gain his release from a Soviet labor camp.

Danylo Shumuk, 63, is reported to be terminally ill and has been in camps for 34 years, his great nephew Yaroslav Shumuk of Richmond said Tuesday.

Shumuk said he has asked Jamieson to press for his great uncle's release on compassionate grounds. Jamieson's office has not yet replied to the request sent Saturday.

Relatives have been trying to gain his release since discovering in 1971 that he was still alive.

Word of his illness came from the dissident underground network to a Russian exile publishing house in Baltimore, Md., relatives said.

Stability In Jobs Forecast

VANCOUVER (CP) — A stable job market here is seen for the next three months by the private employment firm, Manpower Temporary Services (MTS), although the city is lagging behind the national trend.

The firm's quarterly employment survey shows that local layoffs over the next three months are likely to be offset by new hirings by other companies.

This is an improvement over the forecast for the corresponding period last year when a net decrease of 13.2 per cent in hiring intentions was foreseen, said MTS general manager Don Cormack.

The forecast by Vancouver employers, however, is well below the national average which shows that 22.9 per cent of the 950 companies polled indicated plans to hire during October, November and December, while 11.3 per cent anticipated layoffs.

The national results compare favorably with the corresponding period last year, but are less optimistic than projections for July, August and September when 30.4 per cent of employers anticipated new hirings and only 6.4 per cent foresaw layoffs.

38 Stab Wounds

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP) — A woman whose mutilated body was found in the bedroom of her basement apartment in nearby Burnaby last year had been stabbed and slashed 38 times, a British Columbia Supreme Court jury was told Monday.

Dr. Campbell J. Cody said the wounds likely were caused by a knife found sticking out of the victim's right eye. The woman also was stabbed in the heart, the right lung, the liver and the back, he said.

Russel Raymond Rafuse, 21, of Burnaby, has pleaded not guilty to a charge of second-degree murder in the stabbing of Virginia Alice Sjoberg, 24.

Canadian TV Fare 'On Ropes'

OTTAWA (CP) — U.S. shows have Canadian programming on the ropes and strong measures are needed to revive it, CBC president Al Johnson told the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission Tuesday.

He prescribed an extra dose of Canadian content for both the CBC and the private stations, a five-year moratorium on any plans for pay television and a share of cable television revenue as part of a package to save Canadian programming.

He also said that only four U.S. channels should be available to Canadian cable subscribers.

Appearing before the CRTC for almost routine renewal of CBC radio and television licences in both French- and English-language services, Johnson produced CBC survey figures showing that Canadians are hooked on U.S. programs to the extent that Canadian shows are attracting their smallest-ever number of viewers.

English-language Canadians, for example, spend about 74 per cent of their viewing time watching U.S. shows. French-language Canadians spend 48 per cent of their viewing time watching foreign TV shows, some of them dubbed and telecast by French-language by French-language stations.

In addition 53 per cent of French-language viewers are tuning in on English-language stations at least once a week to watch U.S. programs.

Johnson's cure for Canadian programming, which he said required the co-operation and efforts of the private stations and cable systems, will be theme of the CRTC hearings into the licence renewals. The hearings are expected to last well into next week.

CBC's own case will be placed before the CRTC by the end of this week but the commission has agreed to hear briefs from 56 of the 138 persons or organizations who wrote the CRTC with comment on the corporation's service.

The interventions came from a wide sweep of Canadian society, including church groups, Indian bands, homosexuals, the Ottawa Old Time Fiddlers Association and Peter Kent, former CBC newsreader and now the corporation's correspondent in Africa.

Kent is expected to make his complaints about alleged interference with the CBC by Prime Minister Trudeau's office Thursday morning.

Johnson quoted survey figures showing that Canadian youngsters between the age of two and 11 spend 83 per cent of their television time watching U.S. programs. French-speaking youngsters between the ages of seven and 17 almost 60 per cent of their viewing time watching foreign shows.

"They are in danger of growing up American," he said.

He said CBC will boost its Canadian prime time content to 65 per cent from 60 per cent, aiming at 80 per cent in the early 1980s.

He urged the CRTC to set a 55 per cent prime time quota for the private stations.

But he rejected a commissioner's suggestion that CBC drop all foreign programming, saying it had a parliamentary mandate for a mix of Canadian good foreign programs.

And it was unrealistic at this time to suggest that CBC drop all commercials from its English-language TV service, he told another commissioner.

He predicted that pay television in Canada would be dominated by U.S. movies and sports as it now is in the U.S.

"And the cultural price of bringing in even more American programming is simply too high and largely counter-productive," he added.

ISLAND BAN ON MUSSELS ORDERED

CAMPBELL RIVER — A ban on the harvesting of mussels because of the deadly red tide has been imposed in the Campbell River, Cortes and Quadra Island area.

Sports fisheries officer Dean Miller said a fisheries biological officer discovered the paralytic shellfish toxin in mussels in the area.

The ban will last until midnight, Nov. 15.

The area of the ban runs from just north of Kelsey Bay to just south of Port Neville, includes the whole of Bute Inlet, touches George Point, takes in Quadra and Cortes Islands and ends in the south at Shelter Point.

Laguna Land Still Sliding Away

LAGUNA BEACH, Calif. (AP) — The shifting earth under the town of Bluebird Canyon was still slipping intermittently Tuesday, endangering at least six more houses.

Authorities said they expect the movement to continue for another day or so.

Police raised damage estimates to more than $9 million after Monday morning's slow-moving landslide carved a 12-metre canyon through the expensive hillside neighborhood and moved $150,000 houses about like toys.

Two residential blocks dipped nine metres below their normal level and slipped downhill at least eight metres.

City Manager Fred Solomon declared a state of emergency in the neighborhood. He said the city will ask state and federal officials to declare Bluebird Canyon a disaster.

Tuesday's periodic earth movements toppled a few more telephone poles and further wrecked two already-shattered streets. Police Lieut. Al Olson said about six homes were hanging over the edges of newly-formed cliffs and "if we have much more ground movement we're probably going to lose those as well."

Olson said 24 homes were considered destroyed. He said those not torn apart by the sliding earth will have to be levelled because their foundations are gone.

Police reported only a few injuries, the worst being a broken shoulder.

Geologists were trying to determine what caused the destruction. An earthquake has been ruled out and there has been no recent rainfall.

COOLING IT: a lone fireman sits while spraying water over remains of an oil cracking tower that exploded Tuesday at Commerce City, Colo., touching off a $5- to $10-million blaze at the Conoco Oil Co. in which three persons were killed and 11 seriously injured.

Finnish Transport Crashes

HELSINKI (AP) — A Finnish air force transport aircraft crashed into a lake Tuesday night, and air force headquarters said at least 15 persons were feared killed, including three members of Parliament, a provincial governor, executives of several large companies and civic leaders.

The plane, carrying a crew of three and at least 12 passengers, crashed into Lake Juurusvesi soon after taking off from the airport at Kuopio, 389 kilometres northeast of Helsinki.

The passengers had taken part in a civil defence course given annually to civic and business leaders. They were on their way back to Helsinki.

Witnesses told the Finnish radio the plane "exploded in flames as it hit the water." Seconds before the crash the plane's captain told the control tower: "The right engine stopped, I'm coming back."

The twin-engined DC-3 was reported to have started to turn back at a height of 120 metres.

Jitters Time

'lift' wears off quickly and you have to repeat the process or you 'come down.'

"Now you see why at times your system screams for regular injections of nicotine. When you quit your system immediately reacts with something called 'smoker's tension.' You feel depressed and you are. When you reach this stage you're hooked and this is the main reason you smoke, although you may say 'it relaxes me' or 'it keeps my weight down by killing my appetite'."

Here's something else from that pamphlet: "The important thing is you have to want to quit. Want it bad enough to suffer those withdrawal symptoms you're going to have for weeks . . ."

By the way, if anyone out there has the idea they've been smoking so long that it's not worth giving up now, consider this: There is medical evidence that beginning one year after the cessation of smoking, the risk of lung cancer decreases progressively. And after 10 years of being off the weed, the risk is considered only slightly higher than for those who have never smoked.

That's just a little bonus on top of how good you're going to feel when you're through with nicotine.

There now are six members of the Times' newsroom staff who have decided to follow David Cotter's program and quit. Wire editor Bryan Hay has joined photographer Bill Halkett, reporter Derek Sidenius, sportswriter and deskman Jim Crerar (who jumped the gun and has been nicotine-free for three weeks now), city editor Bill Bachop and managing editor Gordon Bell.

Seventh spot has been reserved for sports editor Doug Peden, who is notably edgy about the topic. Could be a little persuasion from Doug's many friends would help?

And, letters from Times' readers are coming in stating they're willing to go public, have their names published as quitters and thus place themselves under the watchful eyes of relatives and friends for any signs of backsliding.

If you want to stop smoking and are willing to let everyone know it, send in your name and address to: I Quit, c/o City Editor, Victoria Times, 2621 Douglas St., Victoria, V8W 2N4. All names received up to Tuesday morning will be published along with the initial article by David Cotter. You'll be in good company.

Blaze In Beirut

national unity, according to Beirut press reports.

It was the worst night yet for the predominantly Moslem western half of Beirut from Tuesday night to Wednesday morning.

Moslem leftist gunmen appeared on the darkened streets of the capital, setting up flying roadblocks, stopping cars and checking identity cards.

For the first time since Syrian-Christian clashes escalated dramatically over the weekend, heavy shellfire crashed into the western sector.

But there was no sign yet of Palestinian or leftist Lebanese involvement in the Syrian-Christian conflict that erupted last February.

The devastating artillery barrages of the past four days deprived large sections of Beirut and its suburbs of not only utilities but also food and water.

The fighting — the fiercest since the Lebanese civil civil war ended three years ago — posed a threat to the Camp David accords on the Middle East engineered by President Carter.

At the United Nations, Secretary of State Cyrus Vance joined an all-out international diplomatic effort involving France, Saudi Arabia and the Arab League to contain the crisis.

Permission Needed To Air Interviews

OTTAWA (CP) — A federal communications regulation requiring a broadcaster to obtain a person's permission before airing a telephone interview was upheld Tuesday by the Supreme Court of Canada.

In a 6-to-3 decision the high court rejected an appeal by Ottawa radio station CKOY, which had argued that the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission (CRTC) had no power to make the regulation.

A provincial judge ruled in 1974 that the station had taped a telephone interview with a University of Ottawa student, then broadcast it without her permission, contrary to the CRTC's AM radio broadcast regulations. However, he ruled that a section of the regulations is not authorized by the Broadcasting Act.

The Ontario Court of Appeal reversed that decision and CKOY appealed to the Supreme Court.

The CRTC regulation says that a telephone interview or conversation cannot be broadcast unless the person's oral or written permission is given, or unless the person has telephoned to participate in a broadcast.

Barrels of Death Rot

which recycles dry-cleaning solvent, dumped the barrels and went bankrupt after operating for more than a year without a business licence or land-use contract with the municipality, Delta environmental officer Elwood Adams said Tuesday.

The municipality's environmental officers agree there is nowhere to dump the barrels, but maintain it's the landowner's problem.

The two couples who own the land said it would cost between $3 million and $4 million to move the chemicals. They said Douglas Harris, owner of Tri-Chem Refineries, has no money and they have no intention of pressing him for it.

Allan MacIntyre, of the federal environmental protection service, said tests taken a few months ago indicated the barrels were not leaking, but it is only a matter of time before they do.

Adams said the barrels contain mercury, dry-cleaning solvents, benzene, toluene, sodium cyanide, hydrochloric acid.

He said no ingredient tests have been done and scientists are relying on the wording on the label.

Benzene, banned as a consumer product in the United States, has been conclusively linked to leukemia.

A reporter who visited the site six weeks ago — before it was secured — stepped in some sludge and subsequently required medical treatment for burns to her feet, hands and face.

The wife of the head of Tri-Chem, Marylou Harris, said Tuesday, the business has basically run out of money and she blames it on the failure of all three levels of government.

Delta may have one hope of a solution to what Adams calls "the bomb in our backyard." Kempenfeldt Investments of nearby Coquitlam has proposed buying the factory and starting a chemical waste recycling business.

Frightening, really.

For you never know when you might lose touch with your daughter or your son.

The house is an impressive one in a lovely area of Gordon Head. A Cadillac stands in the driveway but in the home there is sadness and anger. A child, in a hurry to become a woman, has run away.

She was your average 14-year-old except that she got in with the wrong crowd, says her mother.

"My daughter became involved with a group of kids well known to the courts, kids with 50 or 60 convictions," says the woman. "And she was always running away.

"Once she took off during school (from Arbutus Junior High) and was missing a week before police using helicopters found her on Saturna Island," the girl's mother explains. "She was with a 19-year-old boy and had been involved with others in a B and E when guns were stolen and the kids were threatening to 'blow off a couple of Pigs' heads.'

"After we went through hours of counselling down at the police station, we brought our daughter home but during the night she climbed through a basement window and ran away again. She was found by police with other kids in a seedy hotel room in downtown Victoria.

"When she was returned to us at 2 a.m., she told police she didn't want to go home. She said she wasn't like us. She wanted to do things on her own. She wanted a night life."

One night soon after that, the woman says she overheard a phone conversation between her daughter and a girlfriend.

"The other girl, who was 13, told my daughter to steal as much money as she could from home and they discussed their plan for running away — which involved the 19-year-old boy who was going to find them somewhere to stay.

"When she did run away, we found she'd been through her 17-year-old sister's drawers and had stolen money from her purse," the mother says. "The police found her again and they suggested I go down and file an uncontrollable charge against my daughter."

It was then that things started getting worse instead of better for the woman and the rest of the family. They had a lot of co-operation from the Saanich Police — particularly Corporal Bob Pringle — but became extremely frustrated at the provincial human resources ministry.

Social workers failed to turn up in court each time they went to bring the charge, the woman says, and finally the department talked them out of the uncontrollable charge altogether and they agreed to settle out of court.

"She was to become a non-ward and would go to a receiving home and then to a group home," the woman explains. "Up till then she'd been at the Juvenile Detention Home (JDH) which is so lax that the kids love it. It's like a Holiday Inn for juveniles!

"A man from Human Resources went to my husband (a construction superintendent) where he was working and told him it would be $200 a month (it has since been lowered to $115) for the girl to go to a group home. Well, we just couldn't afford it so they simply brought her back home.

"We went to family counselling once a week for a couple of weeks but she became bored and ran away again. Then we signed the non-ward contract and, after she was found downtown living with a bunch of guys, she was sent to the group home."

But the girl ran away from there, too, turning up at her home one night with an 18-year-old boy and asking for her parents' permission to live with him. They refused but she went ahead anyway and eventually Human Resources wrote to the mother and said they were wiping their hands of her. "She was, they said in their letter, "so steadfast in refusing to follow our direction . . ."

"So there she is, at just turned 15, living with someone downtown," the mother says angrily. "She has admitted being on drugs, stealing and being a prostitute on Victoria streets. She is no longer under Human Resources care because they couldn't control her either — which is what I told them in the first place."

The woman is angry they didn't allow the uncontrollable charge to stand because then the girl would have become a ward of the court. But, she says, her lawyer told her these charges are discouraged because they don't have anywhere to put the kids.

And so, the woman has been campaigning for just that: a place to send them.

Letters have been sent to Premier Bill Bennett, Human Resources Minister Bill Vander Zalm, the mayor and council of Saanich and to the police. So far, she says, she has received only "buck-passing" replies. In her letter she suggested:

"Let those in top authority do something constructive immediately in the way of a remedial institution, which would be money wisely and well spent."

The woman says she has tried everything she could to keep the girl in the home.

"I've never worked," she points out. "I've always been here for my kids. But this girl is constantly harassing her older sister, who goes to church. She calls her a goody-goody and a holy roller. And I've got two other little ones to bring up."

The girl's grandfather agrees wholeheartedly with the mother.

"Human Resources places the whole emphasis on doing what is best for the child," he says. "They stress keeping the child in the family at all cost, no matter what havoc it plays with the other members. But it doesn't always work out and there should be somewhere they can be sent.

"There's nothing we can gain from this," he says "We just hope that from it others can learn . . ."

Mrs. Winnifred Dovey gets hot meal from Mrs. Doris Murray of Meals on Wheels

. . . And a Side Order Of the Human Touch

Food delivered to the door, cooked and ready to eat, is an occasional modest indulgence for most Victorians.

Whether it's pizza, fried chicken or the full chop suey works, the reason for ordering is usually lack of time, a disinclination to cook or just plain whim.

But for other, less fortunate residents there's an unheralded service operating on weekdays throughout the year, bringing them not only a hot nourishing meal but also something just as important — human contact.

Mrs. Pauline Barker, executive director of the Silver Threads organization which co-ordinates the Meals on Wheels service, says the 200 people receiving the daily meal at home are those who, for reasons of health or disability, cannot shop or prepare meals for themselves.

"Some of them probably never see anyone apart from the public health nurse and the Meals on Wheels volunteer," she says.

"It means so much for them to have someone drop in for a friendly chat, even it's only for a few minutes."

Meals on Wheels has two full-time employees whose salaries are paid by a provincial government grant, but the service relies almost entirely on the efforts of a team of 120 volunteers.

These people, acting as drivers, hostesses and ticket sellers, usually donate their services, cars and gas on a once-a-week basis. A typical route of 10 to 12 meals takes about two hours to complete.

If that were all they did it would be a lot, but Mrs. Barker says the volunteers also help the shut-ins in numerous other ways.

Before a statutory holiday they'll deliver frozen lunches which the recipients can pop in the refrigerator. Or, if there's no fridge, the volunteers will cook the meals at their own homes and take them round.

They also take care of shopping needs, letter writing and other small tasks.

"We have some very generous people and they get very involved with the people they are helping," said Mrs. Barker.

In the fiscal year ending March, 1978, the organization delivered 41,778 meals. Regular meals are cooked at the Goodwill centre but the diet meals for diabetics and others with special diet needs — a service introduced about 18 months ago — are prepared by Royal Jubilee Hospital staff.

Meals on Wheels is a United Way agency receiving $3,000. It seems a small sum to accomplish so much.

Sabotage Feared On Estuary Study

By PAUL NICHOLSON
Times Staff

Inaccurate media stories based on leaked, early draft reports lacking companion documents and maps could sabotage the prospects for a good, over-all plan for the Cowichan River estuary, says the chairman of the task force studying the estuary.

Bryan Gates said a series of recent newspaper stories over the last few months is undermining the work of the 22-member task force.

"The stories are based on information which has been misinterpreted, taken out of context and analysed without necessary maps," Gates charged.

And the Sierra Club's conclusions from the same reports are dead wrong too, he added.

Gates, upset at people who do not have all the facts taking swipes at the task force, urged observers to await the final outcome of the study before passing judgment.

Gates is a biologist working for the Secretariat of the government's Environment and Land Use Committee (ELUC).

The secretariat is the staff arm of ELUC. The committee itself is composed of nine cabinet ministers under the chairmanship of Environment Minister Jim Nielsen.

The task force is to report to ELUC which will make the final decisions on present and possible future industrial development on the Cowichan estuary.

Gates said the draft reports and memos which have surfaced in at least one local paper are months out of date and bear little relation to the final report being drawn up by the task force.

The final report is expected to be in ELUC's hands by the end of October.

Ministry spokesman Steve Phillips said he wants to bury once and for all the rumors that Nielsen tampered with the task force's original recommendations in August and that two draft reports leaked in September bear conflicting data which proves Nielsen interfered.

Phillips said all Nielsen got in August was a verbal progress report from Gates and Dennis O'Gorman, director of the ELUC secretariat.

Nielsen read no documents and simply said he was pleased with what had been done to date.

One August newspaper story said the task force recommended no further industrial expansion on the estuary.

Both Gates and Phillips say that too is absolutely wrong and that the task force had made no firm recommendations by that time.

Yet another story in late September based on the information in two draft reports obtained by a newspaper said they conflicted with each other.

But they weren't drafts of the same report. One was the second draft of an executive summary on the estuary, the other was the third draft on a potential land-use plan for the estuary.

The executive then wrote a third draft of its summary, but the newspaper didn't have the latest of the executive summary reports.

The two reports were out of sequence and did not truly reflect each other and couldn't be properly analysed without the accompanying maps.

The two reports were also designed as drafts for input from others on the 22-member force that would lead to changes in the final draft — the whole idea of a task force.

Apart from all that, a close look at the two reports shows they contain essentially the same information.

Only the terminology is slightly different so the complex descriptions would be easier to understand in the final report.

When studied with the maps, the two reports contain no changes with regard to the areas slated for no development, park and tourist use and possible industrial use.

The latest newspaper story on the task force which appeared Monday was based on a memo from one of the task force members criticizing another member's position.

The story said a federal fisheries memorandum objected to contents of the submission by the provincial economic development ministry which favored industrial development on the estuary.

But the memo is dated in July during meetings of the task force where representatives were all commenting on each other's proposals and positions — again the whole object of a task force, Gates said.

Included in most of the newspaper stories were comments on the leaked information by the Sierra Club's regional conservation representative Bob Nixon.

Gates said Nixon's interpretations were categorically wrong in each instance.

Nixon admits he is fully aware he has only part of the information but said that's the basis for his criticism.

He wants all the discussions to be public.

PAPERS STOLEN SAYS NIELSEN

Environment Minister Jim Nielsen said at noon today materials and papers prepared by the Cowichan River task force have been stolen.

The minister, commenting on media articles which task force officials say were inaccurate and premature, said: "Somewhere along the line someone is stealing materials and passing them on and unfortunately destroying the purpose of those papers".

Nielsen, asked to explain his use of the word steal, said this generally is what happens when someone takes material and makes use of it without authorization.

Dog Slaughters Pigeon Collection

A killer dog Tuesday night entered an aviary at 55 Dupplin Road and slaughtered what was believed the most unique pigeon collection in North America.

Only three of the 71 rare birds collected from all parts of the world survived.

The birds had been gathered by Don Adams, Victoria manager for the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

Adams, an international authority on pigeons, said today his collection represented 10 years of work and research.

He said he fears at least one species may now be extinct as the result of Wednesday's killings.

"The species came from the Pacific island of Socorro off Mexico. None have been seen in recent years," he said.

One species originated on one of the Galapagos Islands in South American waters while others came from New Guinea, the Philippines and isolated islands in the Pacific.

Adams said he collected rare species to determine their feeding habits and to find out why some species reproduced so poorly.

His work would have made it possible to breed rare pigeons in captivity for later release in the wild.

"I had to travel to get some rare pigeons and convince various governments that I was engaged in research to prevent some species becoming extinct," Adams said.

"They were interested in the project and expected some results.

"Now it has all come to an end."

Couvelier Asks 20% Hikes

Salary increases of about 20 per cent for the mayor and aldermen in Saanich have been recommended by Mayor Mel Couvelier.

But, if his recommendations are endorsed by the finance committee and council, the salary boost would not take effect until December, 1979 — after the term of office of all present council members has expired.

Couvelier suggests the formula for determining future council salaries be based on population estimates: at a rate of 30 cents per capita for the mayor and 10 cents per capita for aldermen.

On current population figures that would place the mayor's remuneration at $22,014 (an increase of $3,388 on the present $18,626) and the aldermen's at $7,338 (up $1,338 from $6,000 now).

Couvelier's report will be discussed by the finance committee next week.

He was asked to undertake the salary review earlier this year after ratepayer and community groups declined an invitation to recommend appropriate salary levels.

He makes it clear in the report that he approached the task reluctantly, because "I still have the greatest difficulty with the principle of ourselves establishing our own remuneration levels . . ."

Couvelier says he rejected the possibility of determining Saanich salaries by taking the average of those paid in other municipalities, or of relating the figure to gross revenues.

On the first point he notes that "wild variations" (from a $8,400 mayor's salary in Prince George to $25,600 in Coquitlam) make an averaging formula impracticable.

There are similar fluctuations in gross revenues, ranging from $13.5 million to $31 million in a list of nine municipalities, he notes.

In this list Saanich is second in population size but seventh in terms of council remuneration, he adds.

In addition to the per capita formula, Couvelier recommends continuing the present system under which one-third of the total salary is considered tax-free allowance.

After talking to many individuals, he says, he has now changed his original opinion that the allowance has been abused by elected officials.

But the strongest argument for retaining the tax-free allowance is that it saves the taxpayers money, he adds.

"I agree with the proponents of the expense allowance that its discontinuance would require a higher basic pay level to compensate for the income tax which would have to be paid on the salary."

Ask the Times

Q. At what times do any of the communications satellites pass over during the first hours after dark? R.R.S.

A. None of the numerous communications satellites pass over Victoria, but the last four to be launched have been located in geo-synchronous orbit at a height of about 35,800 km. over the equator. Therefore, the nearest point on earth to them would be the equator, which remains at a fixed distance. Geo-synchronous means that the satellite moves through space in constant relation to a fixed point on earth.

More than 1,500 satellites have been launched since Sputnik I, Oct. 4, 1957, many of which have been allowed to disintegrate in space or were deliberately destroyed by their U.S. or Russian launchers. In the first 22 years the Soviets launched 586 military instruments, the U.S. 326, plus 292 and 323 civil space packages, respectively. Some earth-scanning satellites do orbit over Victoria on their intended track covering every spot on the globe at a rate of several revolutions a day.

Millhaven Inmates Claim Mistreated, Mail Fiddled

OTTAWA (CP) — A prisoners' group describes Millhaven Institution, a federal maximum-security prison, as a "hell-hole" at which their visitors are mistreated and their mail is passed around indiscriminately.

The complaints are contained in a 2,000-word brief mailed this week from the prison west of Kingston, Ont., and directed against practices in the Millhaven visiting and correspondence unit.

The brief was prepared by the Odyssey Group, which recently published Millhaven's first prisoner newsletter, and is endorsed by the prisoner committee, which represents some 350 men in the institution.

It was mailed to Solicitor-General Jean-Jacques Blais, Corrections Commissioner Donald Yeoman, Millhaven Director Henry Neufeld, Mark MacGuigan (L—Windsor-Walkerville), chairman of a parliamentary committee that proposed extensive prison reforms in 1976, and several newspaper and civil liberties groups.

The visiting and correspondence unit decides whether a visitor may see a prisoner. The unit then is supposed to call the prisoner to the visiting area and conversation is monitored visually and through electronic listening devices.

A major complaint is arbitrary treatment of visitors, who the prisoners say are sometimes turned away or kept waiting without explanation.

The prisoners recommend that their call and work locations be listed at the visiting and correspondence office so they can be located quickly. They also recommend that one officer be removed from the office because he "is believed to be the worst offender by the prison population."

Another proposal is that contact visits — visits in which visitors and prisoners may touch — not be delayed until 1980 when a new visiting area is built.

The prisoners say they would be happy to work free to renovate the current visiting area.

"Prisoners would be able to hold their children, whereas, at present, some prisoners have gone years without holding and touching their children."

The prisoners say contact visits would be an incentive to good conduct, an argument supported by a 1976 Report to Parliament by an all-party parliamentary subcommittee under MacGuigan.

The subcommittee report said that prisons should do everything in their power to encourage visits by family members. The subcommittee said that "contact visiting should be allowed in maximum security," with some precautions against smuggling.

Prison mail, going and coming, is censored at the gate. Only letters to and from members of Parliament are supposed to pass unread. But at Millhaven, the prisoners maintain that a letter from Solicitor-General Jean-Jacques Blais arrived at a prisoner's cell opened and bearing the censor's stamp.

Byelection Date Snag Solved?

OTTAWA (CP) —The government is proposing an extra advance polling day to accommodate Jewish voters in the 15 byelections Oct. 16, Conservatives said Tuesday.

A Conservative spokesman said Deputy Prime Minister Allan MacEachen made the proposal during a meeting of House leaders of all parties.

The extra day has been suggested by Conservative Leader Joe Clark because the election date and advanced polling dates either conflict with Thanksgiving Day or Jewish sacred days.

The spokesman said the government has suggested the Commons consider legislation permitting the extra day Tuesday. The legislation would be passed through all stages by unanimous consent and the session of Parliament that began early this year would be brought to an end.

On Thursday the speech from the throne outlining government plans for a new session of Parliament would be read. The throne speech debate would start Friday and the leaders of the major parties would speak Tuesday, byelection day.

The spokesman said there is no question that the Conservatives would agree to the extra voting day — did not know the date being considered. But he said the party was to consider its response to the government proposal for a Thursday throne speech and would reply today.

Meanwhile, government sources said MacEachen reports to cabinet today on his talks and ministers were to discuss throne speech plans.

Government House has been kept wondering when Gov.-Gen. Jules Leger will be asked to read the throne speech.

Clark said last month Jews will be inhibited from voting in the Oct. 16 elections either by religious law, tradition or reluctance to vote on Thanksgiving Day.

He noted there are three days during which advance polls can be taken: Saturday, Oct. 7, Jewish Sabbath; Monday, Oct. 9, Thanksgiving Day; Tuesday, Oct. 10, the eve of Yom Kippur. Byelection day was the first day of Sukkot, the Jewish Festival of Tabernacles.

He proposed that legislation be brought in making Thursday, Oct. 12, an additional advance poll day.

If the government goes ahead with its throne speech plans it means that a highly political document favorable to the Liberals will be made public just six days in advance of the byelections.

DRAPEAU THINKS AGAIN

MONTREAL (CP) — Mayor Jean Drapeau described Tuesday an apparent state of confusion about the hiring of Roger Taillibert and unexpected changes in the Paris architect's plans which led to delays in starting Olympic construction.

The Taillibert plans were not complete until almost a year after the city had vaunted the proposed Olympic facilities at a 1972 news conference, Drapeau told a Quebec inquiry into the cost of the 1978 Games.

Commission lawyer Jacques Dagenais has been engaged in a running verbal fencing match with Drapeau on the delay in production of plans.

This has been singled out as a major factor in the dramatic cost increase — to the final $1.27-billion figure from the original 1969 estimate of only $120 million.

The mayor said Olympic construction did not start sooner because the plans were not ready.

Near the end of Tuesday's hearing, Dagenais produced a document indicating that work could not have begun before 1973 because Taillibert changed his designs for the main facilities in the year after they were shown at a news conference in April, 1972.

"Is it true engineers were not hired because there were no plans?" Dagenais asked.

Drapeau, who said he had never seen the document before, replied, "Yes."

This apparently contradicted his repeated assertion last week that the reason was a lack of funds resulting from the federal government's failure to pass legislation establishing Olympic self-financing programs until 1973.

Oilman To Pay $812,500 Damages

OTTAWA (CP) — Calgary oilman Thomas L. Brook will have to pay damages of $812,500 to a Netherlands firm as the result of a Supreme Court of Canada decision Tuesday.

A unanimous decision by the seven members of the court who heard the case settles a dispute over shares in an oil company. It first reached the courts in 1960.

Baud Corp. N.V., the Netherlands firm involved, has been seeking damages it says resulted from the failure of Brook to return 125,000 shares the company loaned him in 1957.

Alberta courts found in favor of Baud, but set the value of the shares at $250,000. Baud at one point raised its damage claim to $6 million.

In writing the decision for the court, Mr. Justice Willard Estey said he would allow the appeal and vary the judgment of the lower courts "by awarding damages payable by Brook to Baud in the amount of $812,500 together with costs to Baud throughout."

Information placed before the court showed that in 1957, Brook and a New York-based company, Sea Oil and General Corp., agreed to work together on oil exploration in Indonesia.

Sea Oil wholly owned the Baud Corp., which in turn had 196 of the 400 shares in Nusantara, a firm with promising acreage in Indonesia.

Under the deal, Brook's firm, New British Dominion Oil Co., changed its name to Asamera Oil Co. Shares of the newly-named firm was issued to Baud in return for the oil rights in Indonesia.

Soon after the agreement was made in 1957, Brook approached Baud executives and explained that his Asamera shares were held by his brokers as collateral on purchase of other shares. He feared the shares were in danger of being sold and asked Baud for a loan of 125,000 shares.

Baud said the shares were not returned, beginning the lengthy series of legal manoeuvres between the groups.

PQers Grab Mikes at Federalist Rally

ST. JEAN, Que. (CP) — It was the first public meeting of the pre-referendum committee, the umbrella organization grouping pro-federalist parties and associations, but to the annoyance of some — and the glee of others — loud Parti Quebecois supporters were first at the microphones Tuesday night.

"Vive le Quebec libre!" shouted one man who said he was "a member of the independence movement since its founding hours."

"It's time for the rest of Canada to put up or shut up," he added, still screaming, as some members of the audience groaned, others laughed, and still others tried to outshout him.

But he continued. "Vive le Quebec libre, vote 'yes' at the referendum. Vive le Quebec libre!" he yelled as he walked back to his seat.

Premier Rene Levesque has said the independence referendum, promised by the Parti Quebecois government during the campaign leading to its victory in the Nov. 15, 1976, election, will be held after the next federal election.

The pre-referendum committee represents the Quebec-Canada movement, Decision Canada, the Positive Action Committee, Contact Canada, Impact Quebec, Ralli Canada and the Council for Canadian Unity — all pro-federalist groups — as well as federal and provincial political parties.

The umbrella group will fight for the federalist option during the campaign leading to the referendum.

Decision Canada has scheduled 47 public meetings to be held across the province between now and next March. At each meeting speeches by well-known local personalities will be followed by a question-and-answer period.

Lawyer Claims Client Refused to Rig Bids

TORONTO (CP) — A defence lawyer said Tuesday he believed that McNamara Corp. Ltd. was forced to submit a low bid on a Toronto harbor dredging job because the vice-president of Peter Kiewit Sons Co. of Canada Ltd. had refused to submit an inflated bid.

George Finlayson told an Ontario Supreme Court jury that he will prove that his client, John Bahen, vice-president and general manager of Peter Kiewit, was not guilty of bid-rigging on the 1973 dredging job.

Bahen refused to play along in bid-rigging, Finlayson said.

As a result, Bahen actually may have saved the Toronto board of harbor commissioners money, the lawyer said.

Bahen and his company are among 11 men and nine companies charged with defrauding public agencies of $4.3 million by rigging dredging contracts between 1969 and 1975.

Bahen and his company are alleged to have defrauded the Toronto harbor board of commissioners of $1.2 million by bid-rigging on the 1973 harbor dredging job.

The Crown has alleged that the Peter Kiewit company submitted an inflated bid of $9 million in return for three per cent of McNamara's gross revenues from the contract.

Jack Jones, chief engineer for the commissioners, told the jury that during a March, 1973, meeting of the commissioners he learned of an allegation that a tender submitted by McNamara might have been rigged.

He said he had estimated the job would cost $7.5 million and, under cross-examination by Crown Attorney Roderick McLeod, said he found it difficult to believe the $7.1-million tender price submitted by McNamara.

McNamara, also a co-defendant in the case, eventually was awarded the contract.

In a report he was asked to prepare on the tendering procedures for the 1973 job, Jones said he took the position that everything was done correctly.

"We assume that tendering is generally honest," he said. "If we did not, we wouldn't be tendering."

The trial continues.

Takeoff Chart, Tires Blamed For DC-9 Skid

BRAMPTON, Ont. (CP) — The first officer on an Air Canada DC-9 jet that skidded off the end of a damp runway at Toronto International Airport and crashed into a ravine said Tuesday he was unaware that a chart he used to determine takeoff distances pertained to dry runways.

Douglas Carnegie agreed with Steve Anderson, a lawyer representing the family of one of two passengers killed in the crash, that the plane's takeoff could have been safely aborted had the chart been specific about runway conditions.

Testifying at an coroner's inquest into the June 26 crash, he said he then could have advised the flight captain to use a longer runway.

Carnegie, suspended from duty since the crash, said the chart should have specified that its data assumed a bone-dry surface.

An Air Canada engineer testified Tuesday that a third of the 50 DC-9s that were tested after the accident were found to be defective.

He said the airline took all its Kleber tires, made in France, out of service after the inspections.

Pieces of tire tread came off one wheel, were sucked into one of its engines and caused a warning light in the cockpit to malfunction, the inquest heard Monday.

Crown Attorney Leo McGuigan said evidence would show that the flying tire pieces of contributed to the accident.

FIRE ALARM DOUSED BY HOTEL CLERK

HAMILTON (CP) — A clerk at the Wentworth Arms hotel testified Tuesday that he pulled a switch under the reception desk and shut off fire alarm bells the night of a fire that killed six persons in the hotel.

Michael Lesnick, who had worked at the hotel for 30 years, told an inquest investigating the Dec. 25, 1976, fire that he pulled the switch seconds after the bells began ringing.

The clerk said he shut off the bells because the noise disturbed sleeping guests. On previous occasions, the bells had started to ring during false alarms.

However, he said the bells had never before shut off immediately and hotel employees had to run downstairs into the basement to pull a switch to stop the ringing.

The inquest had been told that a master control panel located in the hotel basement contained a switch that shut off the alarm bells.

Lesnick said it was the first time the bells had stopped after the switch under the reception desk was pulled.

However, two owners of an electric company testified that when they had worked on the hotel alarm system, they knew nothing of the switch shutting off the alarm.

PACK UP SOME GOODNESS IN YOUR OLD BROWN BAG

People have discovered that taking care of your body makes you feel good about yourself. Many of us are walking, jogging, exercising, bike riding and generally getting into better condition.

Part of the process is thinking nutritionally. We should all be aware of the need to eat proper, well-balanced meals and eliminate between-meal snacks and non-nutritious foods.

A good place to start is with lunch. This meal should provide approximately one third of our daily nutritional requirements.

If you are like many of us, you could be eating the wrong foods at lunch or missing lunch altogether.

One of the best solutions is to take your own lunch to work or school. That way, it is possible to arrange a well-balanced meal that is not only good for you, but contains foods you like.

To help you, B.C. Ministry of Agriculture has compiled a booklet called "The Brown Bagger's Handbook". It is full of great lunch planning ideas as well as tested recipes for brown bag lunches that are nutritious, interesting and full of variety. Look for it in your favourite food store. This free handbook is part of a program designed to help people think nutritionally—particularly at lunch.

When you are in your food store, look for special brown bagger price cards on fresh and processed products. They will be your sign of quality, freshness and goodness in the brown bag foods you buy.

Nutrition is important to all ages and school students of the province will be encouraged to participate in a poster contest based on the theme "Nutrition Can Be Fun". Winners will travel to Victoria for a tour of the Legislature conducted by the Honourable James J. Hewitt, Minister of Agriculture. Overall winners will receive farm vacation packages for themselves and their families.

If your food store has run out of Brown Bagger's Handbooks, write for your free copy to:

Anti-Carcinogen Laws Faulted

OTTAWA (CP) — Canadian laws governing cancer-causing substances are far below international labor standards, the federal labor department said in a report released Tuesday.

The report on Canada's compliance with the international labor code said "co-ordinated actions on the part of federal and provincial authorities to provide adequate safeguards against occupational cancer are . . . necessary."

A convention adopted by the Geneva-based International Labor Organization (ILO) in 1974 says all cancer-causing substances or agents should be identified and should be replaced, where possible, "by non-carcinogenic or less harmful ones."

The ILO convention also calls for the keeping of records, medical examination of workers and instruction of workers in the handling of carcinogenic substances.

"In Canada, the present degree of compliance with the convention is minimal," the labor department study said.

Co-ordinated action between the federal and provincial governments is needed to meet the basic requirement of the convention, "namely the drawing of lists of carcinogenic sustances and agents to which exposure is prohibited or controlled and . . . the implementation of a Canada-wide system of records of the exposure of workers to carcinogenic substances and agents."

The study recommended federal-provincial co-operation to provide uniform standards. Because labor matters fall primarily within provincial jurisdiction, laws vary across the country.

There should be laws in all jurisdictions prohibiting the use of harmful substances when less harmful ones can be used and all jurisdictions should establish medical examinations for workers exposed to dangerous substances.

All exposed workers should be provided with information on dangers involved in handling cancer-causing substances. There are no laws in Canada stipulating such measures for cancer-causing substances, although some provinces have measures for dangerous substances in general.

In most other areas, Canada measures up well to international standards and in the field of basic rights "the Canadian worker is fortunate," the study said.

Canadian workers have all the types of social security recommended in the international labor code, but not all have the 40-hour work week and there is little compliance with standards recommended in the ILO conventions on holidays with pay and paid educational leave.

The study says good co-operation exists between federal and provincial governments in trying to deal with ILO matters and the governments should put that co-operation to work.

The general conference of the ILO meets annually to set labor standards. When a convention is adopted, member states are encouraged to ratify it and bring in laws implementing it.

'Quebec Buses Faulty'

MONTREAL (CP) — The Gazette says 75 per cent of buses checked in the first two weeks of a provincial safety campaign failed to pass inspection.

The paper, noting in today's edition that the Quebec transport department is toughening its inspection system as part of a campaign to increase safety, says only 37 of 143 buses passed tests made in the province in the first two weeks of September.

Of 1,980 buses checked between January and August this year, only 20 per cent passed and inspectors ordered 86 scrapped, the Gazette says.

The department recently stepped up its safety campaign following the death of 43 persons in two separate bus accidents in August.

Sectist Found Guilty

SAINT JEROME, Que. (CP) — Gaston Tremblay, head of a dissident Roman Catholic sect called the Apostles of Infinite Love, was found guilty Tuesday of forcibly detaining two children whose father had left the sect.

A Quebec Superior Court jury deliberated for 10 hours before delivering a guilty verdict in the bizarre case which arose from Bill Currier's efforts to wrest his children away from his wife, who remained an Apostle.

Tremblay, known as Father Jean-de-la-Trinite by followers who believe he is the true pope, appeared staggered as police led him away to cells to await sentencing later this week.

He was acquitted on a charge of illegally harboring the children.

Currier broke with the Apostles in 1973, leaving his wife Carmen and their three children under Tremblay's wing.

Currier of Hull, Que., subsequently obtained custody over the children. He then began efforts to free them.

One child was picked up in a police raid last year. But Tremblay helped Carmen keep the other two children. He was arrested in April after evading several warrants.

Mr. Justice Jean-Guy Boilard set a sentence hearing for today.

The maximum sentence for forcible detention is 10 years.

Opponents of the Noose Playing a Quiet Hand

OTTAWA (CP) — While policemen and prison guards mount an expensive campaign to bring back the noose, opponents of capital punishment are keeping quiet, waiting to see whether the government intends to reopen the controversial issue.

Some of the people who lobbied for abolition in 1976 say they are staying out of the debate on reinstatement of the death penalty until the government moves to change the law.

"They won't react until it comes down to the wire," said Ward Adams, executive director of the John Howard Societs in Ottawa. His organization, a prisoners aid society, campaigned for abolition of hanging.

"Right now I don't think anybody is paying attention to it," Adams said. "The abolitionists, or people who want the law to stay the same, are by and large totally unorganized."

In contrast, the Canadian Police Association and the union representing guards in federal penitentiaries have raised $200,000 for a public campaign to bring back the death penalty.

Parliament abolished capital punishment in a free vote in 1976 after two periods of trial abolition. Even though hanging was in force for killers of on-duty policemen and prison guards, there has not been a hanging in Canada since 1962.

Despite Prime Minister Trudeau's frequent statements that the issue is closed, Justice Minister Otto Lang appeared to reopen it last month when he suggested a referendum be held on the subject.

This is just what the policemen want because they feel the public backs their contention that capital punishment is a deterrent to crime.

At their annual convention in August, Canadian police chiefs unanimously approved a resolution calling for the death penalty in first-degree — premeditated — murder.

They said they are satisfied that "the citizens of Canada support this position." A Gallup Poll in April showed 82 per cent of Canadians want a referendum on the subject and 68 per cent want a return to capital punishment.

If the government does decide to officially reopen the question, the John Howard Society, civil liberties and church grgups will undoubtedly gear up campaigns against the death penalty, Adams said.

Both Lang and Trudeau have said they do not feel the advocates of capital punishment would necessarily win such a referendum.

Lang an abolitionist, said he has faith that many persuasive spokesmen for abolition would come forward and perhaps win the oopulation to their side.

Trudeau thinks "people who are convinced that hanging is the only way to protect society can be convinced there are better ways."

The fact that no abolitionists are answering the policemen's challenge is not surprising, said Stuart Leggatt (NDP—New Westminster), whose entire party voted for abolition in 1976.

"It's rare that you have a group of society who starts to militate for no change in the law," Leggatt said in a telephone interview.

"It's very hard to get groups excited when they see the law there and they think it's not going to be changed.

"I don't think for a moment capital punishment is going to be brought back," Leggatt added.

If it were, public opinion would quickly rally in favor of abolition again because the issue is such an emotional one, he said. "Every time you have a policeman murdered, there's urging for capital punishment. Every time you have a hanging, there's more urging for abolition."

The issue is far too emotion-charged to be settled through a referendum and it upset him to see "people like Otto Lang — a known abolitionist — flirting with this nonsense of a referendum."

"Politicians always want a referendum on an issue they think they have a majority on," Leggatt said. "It's a cop-out."

The only group in Canada conducting a campaign against capital punishment is Amnesty International, a London-based international organization which campaigns against political imprisonment and torture.

However, Amnesty's campaign is not in response to the government's discussions about a referendum, but is part of a year-long campaign to abolish capital punishment in the countries where it is still the law.

A Course Encounter On Way

OTTAWA (CP) — What is orange on top, blue underneath, glows as bright as the sun and is faster than a military interceptor?

Don't know? Then enrol in Arthur Bray's course in ufology at Algonquin College.

Bray is a former military pilot who has studied unidentified flying objects for 30 years and has written two books about them. His 10-week, non-credit course is the first of its kind here and the second in Canada.

He said 80 per cent of mysterious objects in the sky can be explained and are of no real interest to serious UFO buffs. But the remaining 20 per cent are fascinating.

Bray says he has seen five UFOs, but insists he will not inject his own beliefs into the course. The course simply will "expose students to all the evidence as well as all accepted viewpoints."

The course includes the history of UFOs, descriptions of persons who report them, classifications of various types of craft, scientific explanations and an examination of abductions.

Lectures also will be punctuated with slide shows and audio tapes of UFOs.

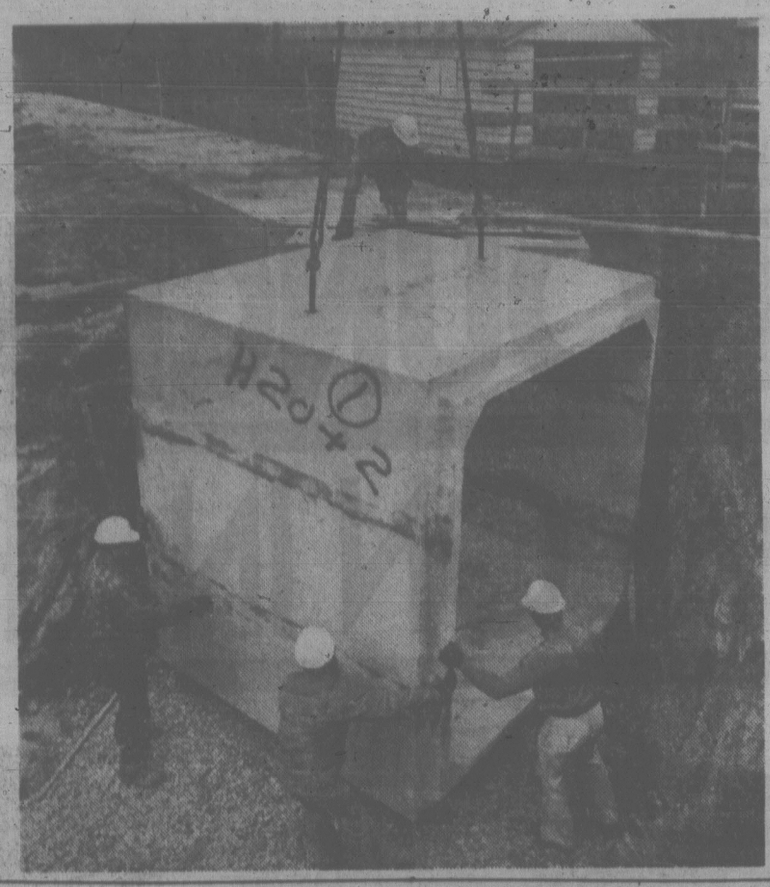
Bray says hundreds of reports show UFOs have similar patterns. Many of the objects can perform rapid 90- or 180-degree turns without banking, and the smell of rotten eggs or sulphur is often associated with their presence.

Others can disappear, and large bodies of water, power stations and military bases are favorite roosts for UFOs.

And then there are the "men in black."

"There is no question about it," he said. "In many cases, one to three oriental-looking characters knock on the doors of witnesses within minutes or hours of sightings before they have spoken to anyone.

"They don't make specific threats, but they tell witnesses not to report anything or they will be sorry," he said.



GREAT CUBES of concrete being buried near Fort and Foul Bay will divert that part of Bowker Creek underground and allow construction of new office building. Crane and workmen are handling 17-ton sections of precast concrete measuring eight feet square and 10 feet long, the largest made in western North America. Enclosed culvert will be 360 feet long.

Women-in-Combat Issue Resurfaces

OTTAWA (CP) — Defence Minister Barney Danson will soon have to grapple again with the explosive issue of women in combat.

He is expected to meet defence department officials within the next month to discuss findings of an intensive study on women in direct fighting jobs in the armed forces.

The minister said this spring he won't move alone on the emotionally-charged issue. He would seek cabinet agreement before acting.

Already, Danson has asked defence department officials for further information on some aspects of the study, including public opinion surveys showing a majority of Canadians favor allowing women in combat roles.

But there are sharp divisions on the issue.

High school student Julia Walsh of Ajax, Ont., ignited a controversey last winter when she protested the armed forces decision to turn down her application to be a pilot. The forces say that is a combat role barred to women.

The 17-year-old, who is taking flying lessons, said this week she is still bent on becoming an armed forces pilot. She is to meet a Canadian human rights commission investigator soon.

On the other hand, many men in the forces object to allowing women in fighting jobs. Some women, such as Col. Marian Gay, say they don't see a place for women on the firing line. However, Col. Gay, the defence department's director of women personnel, says society's attitude may change so women can serve in combat.

The United States is introducing women to combat roles in the army and the marine corps. Women are being trained to carry arms and are prepared to fight.

But Cmdr. R.W. Hunter, a U.S. defence department official, said they will not be assigned to infantry and tank companies given attack roles. Women will handle jobs such as driving trucks and operating signal equipment — jobs supporting the infantry.

Danson said earlier this year he would oppose changing the armed forces rule against women in combat jobs unless society is ready for it. He and top armed forces officers have said they doubt the change is wanted.

These emotional and psychological questions of what civilian and the military want are at the heart of the combat issue.

Are Canadians willing to see women killed and injured in battle? Would the fighting abilities of armed forces units be reduced if women were assigned? Should women be denied any rights available to men?

The defence department commissioned two public opinion polls in the last year to find out.

J.E. Mayhood, the department's personnel research chief, said the Gallup polls of more than 1,056 adults found a "small majority, but by and large a positive majority, saying yes they should be able to serve as soldiers, sailors and airmen."

The first question, last November, simply asked respondents whether they believe there is a place for women in military combat.

Then the department wanted reaction to a question asking whether people would favor women in combat roles even if they were killed, injured or captured.

Mayhood said the response in May still showed a majority favoring women in combat, though the majority dropped a bit. Roughly 50 per cent backed the idea; 35 per cent were against and the balance undecided.

Gathering By Gays

OTTAWA (CP) — Homosexual groups in Vancouver and Ottawa will hold demonstrations Thursday as the Supreme Court of Canada hears the country's first major homosexual rights appeal.

Homosexuals will demonstrate in front of the high court building while others will hold a similar picket in Vancouver.

The appeal is being brought by the Gay Alliance Toward Equality (GATE) which tried to advertise its Gay Tide newspaper in the Vancouver Sun. The Sun refused to carry the ad.

A board of inquiry ruled in 1976 that The Sun had violated the British Columbia Human Rights Code. That ruling was upheld by the B.C. Supreme Court but was overturned by the province's court of appeal.

Sacrificial Lamb Leads Slaughter

. . . "didn't feel pressure"

KANSAS CITY (AP) — The sacrificial lamb who had Kansas City Royals licking their chops turned on them and led them to the slaughter of a 7-1 New York Yankee victory Tuesday night in the opening game of the American League playoffs.

Pressed into service because left-hander Ron Guidry was needed the day before in Boston, rookie Jim Beattie, the Yankees' No. 4 starter, responded with the finest performance of his life. He and young reliever Ken Clay handcuffed the Western Division champions on just two hits while the Yankees pounded four Kansas City hurlers for 16, capped by a towering three-run home run by the remarkable Reggie Jackson, who has reached base in post-season competition eleven straight times.

"I really didn't feel any pressure tonight," said Beattie, who was 6-9 in the regular season and facing Kansas City's top pitcher, 21-game winner Dennis Leonard.

"I wasn't tricky or anything. I just tried to get ahead. I just wanted to pitch seven innings and give our bullpen a chance to rest."

Beattie was never challenged until the sixth, when George Brett doubled and walks to Amos Otis and Pete LaCock loaded the bases.

Yankee manager Bob Lemon then summoned Clay to protect his team's 4-0 lead and he retired Hal McRae on a sacrifice fly and Al Cowens on a ground ball.

The Yankees, who once trailed Boston in the Eastern Division by 14 games and may be en route to one of baseball's all-time comebacks, not only defeated the Royals in the first of this best-of-five series. They embarrassed the hosts who figured that with Guidry available for only one game they would win at least one and possibly both contests scheduled for Kansas City.

The Royals were shaky from the first inning, dropping balls, making poor throws and swinging at bad pitches.

The clincher came in the eighth. Mickey Rivers and Lou Piniella singled off Steve Mingori, who relieved Leonard in the fifth, and Royals manager Whitey Herzog called upon Al (The Mad Hungarian) Hrabosky to deal with Jackson, who already had singled and doubled. The bearded Hrabosky, obtained from St. Louis Cardinals this year to provide the Royals with the left-handed bullpen heat they had needed sodesperately while losing the '76 and '77 playoffs to the Yankees, threw two pitches.

Jackson, the hero of last year's World Series, launched a huge home run over the right field fence.

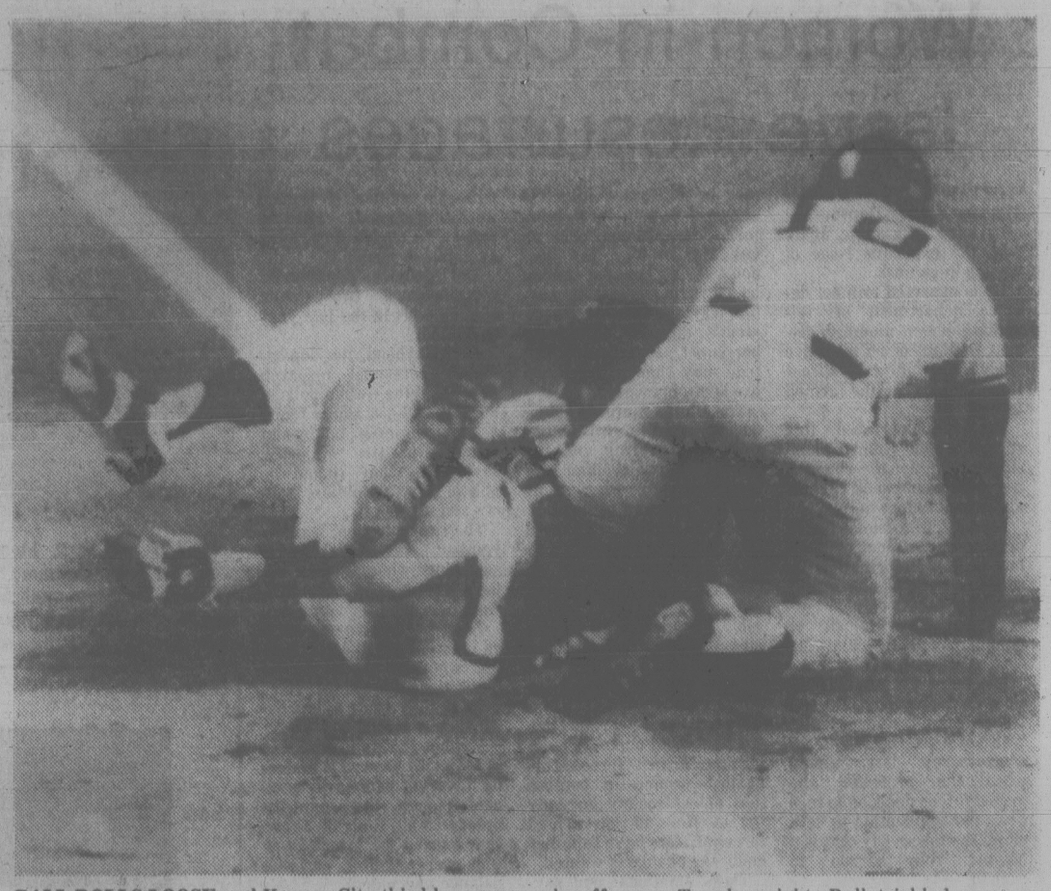
"Some guys hit .300 all year," said Jackson, assuming a modest pose. "I'm one of those fellows that do it for a couple of months. I wasn't psyched by Al. That's his thing and this time I won. Next time out he could be the one that comes out on top."

"We hung one to Reggie," said Herzog. "And you don't get away with hanging 'em to Reggie very often. That's the flattest I've ever seen my ball club play, especially in a playoff. If we don't win tomorrow, we're hurting."

Lemon, who was fired as manager of the Royals six years ago for being too old, admitted Beattie would have watched from the bullpen Tuesday night if Guidry had not been used in the 5-4 showdown victory over the Red Sox.

Ed Figueroa, who won 20 games with his sinking fastball this year, will face Royals left-hander Larry Gura, 16-4, in the second game this afternoon.

"As sure as you've got to breathe," said Kansas City outfielder Amos Otis, "we've got to win it."



BALL ROLLS LOOSE and Kansas City third-baseman George Brett gets charged with error on hard play during ninth inning of American League baseball playoff game Tuesday night. Ball trickled away as Chris Chambliss (10) of New York Yankees slid into Brett while Yankees were on way to 7-1 victory.

Relaxed Yankees Not About to Let Up

KANSAS CITY (AP) — Graig Nettles has news for all those who thought New York Yankees might let down after their pressure-packed playoff with Boston Red Sox for the American League East baseball title.

"Everybody was relaxed, relieved after we beat Boston," said Nettles after the Yankees took a one-game lead in the best-of-five AL championship series with a 7-1 thumping of Kansas City Royals. "And everybody plays better when they're relaxed."

The Yankees had roared from a 14-game deficit in July to grab a 3½-game lead over the Red Sox in mid-September, only to be forced into the playoff situation with a final-game loss to Cleveland.

Nettles said the Boston tie-breaker, which the Yankees won 5-4 Monday, was the most pressure-packed situation in which he's ever had to play.

"The mental part of it will be so much easier than the last three weeks," said the third baseman, who had two hits and drove in a run against the Royals.

"I was telling (Kansas City third baseman) George Brett before the game that even if it goes to the fifth game again, it won't be anything like yesterday (against Boston).

"Yesterday was the peak. No matter if we win or lose, everything from now on will be easier."

While rookie Jim Beattie and Ken Clay were handcuffing the Royals on two hits, the Yankees were pounding out 16 off starter Dennis Leonard and three relievers. It was the most lopsided contest in 11 playoff games between the Yankees and Royals, dating back to 1976.

"I was surprised we got so many hits," said Nettles. "I know everybody is tired. I know I'm tired. If we can get through tomorrow, the off-day Thursday will really help us."

The Yankees entered the playoff opener at a disadvantage, said some observers, because their ace left-hander Ron Guidry had started in the Boston game.

But Beattie, despite surrendering five walks, held the Royals to one run on a single and triple through 5 1-3 innings. Then Clay stymied Kansas City the rest of the way and Reggie Jackson added some breathing room with his massive home run in the eighth.

"I wasn't nervous; I was just trying to go seven to give our bullpen a chance," said Beattie.

Clay, who came in during the sixth with the bases loaded and one out to retire Hal McRae on a sacrifice fly and Al Cowens on a ground ball, echoed Beattie's attitude.

"I wasn't nervous at all. I went in with the score 4-0 and I just wanted to get out of the inning," said Clay. "When Reggie hit the home run and blew it open, all I wanted to do after that was throw strikes."

Ozark Predicts A Sweep; Lasorda 'Not That Smart'

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Philadelphia Phillies were talking tall going into tonight's National League playoff opener, while Los Angeles Dodgers were relatively reserved.

"I just feel we're ready for an offensive explosion," said Mike Schmidt, among several Phils who haven't been their dynamite selves at bat this season. "But I don't think it matters what we do offensively because I think our pitching is going to stop them."

"We'll win it in three," Phillie manager Danny Ozark said casually in the dugout as he awaited the best-of-five set that starts with two games here and finishes in Los Angeles. "I think our pitching is as good as Los Angeles'. Our defence is better.

"We're about 20 points below the team batting average we had last year. But I really expect the guys in so-called prolonged slumps to be a hell of a lot better hitters than they were all year."

The Dodgers worked out later Thursday, and this is how they reacted to the Phillies' confidence.

"They're supposed to feel confident. They're giving their honest opinions about how they feel," said second baseman Dave Lopes. "All I know is that we'll find out in the next five days who is the best."

Manager Tom Lasorda, asked about Ozark's prediction of a sweep, gave the same answer again and again.

"That's what he said last year," said Lasorda, whose team ousted the Phils in four games in the 1977 playoffs.

"He is going to say what he believes," Lasorda added. "But opinions are like noses, everybody has one. We came here to wil, and we feel like that's what we are going to do. But I'm not going to predict how many games it will take. I'm not that smart."

Philadelphia starting pitcher Larry Christenson takes a deceptive 13-14 record into tonight's matchup with Dodger starter Burt Hooton, 19-10.

In Christenson's 14 losses, the Pillies scored a total of 21 runs.

"I won't talk about that except to say that it's made me a better pitcher," he said. "I feel I've pitched my best baseball this past year."

Lasorda feels Hooton has been his best pitcher this season. "He's done so much to get us here. In my opinion, he's the Cy Young award winner," said Lasorda.

(The game will be telecast on channel 4 starting at 5 p.m.)

Griffith Gets Serious For a Public Apology

KANSAS CITY (AP) — "I honestly did not intend to hurt anyone. I was just trying to be funny."

Calvin Griffith was serious this time as he issued a public apology Tuesday night for disparaging remarks he made at a Lions Club meeting in Waseca, Minn., last week.

In a statement released at the opening game of the American League championship series here, Griffith said his remarks were not meant to reflect adversely on baseball or its players.

"I had had a couple of drinks and, in answering questions from the group, I was trying to be funny," Griffith said. "I was appearing at what was to have been an informal gathering and my remarks were geared to the spirit of that occasion.

"The reported stories, however, in isolating partial quotes out of context, so distorted my meaning that the stories in no way reflect the sense of the thoughts I was conveying."

Among his controversial remarks, the 66-year-old Griffith was quoted as saying that he moved his baseball franchise to the Twin Cities from Washington, D.C., because "you only have 15,000 blacks here."

"They'll fill up a rassling ring and put up such a chant it will scare you to death," Griffith said of blacks. "We came here because you've got good, hard-working white people here."

Also in his speech, Griffith called Twins star Rod Carew "a damn fool" for signing a contract for $170,000 and said the performance of catcher Butch Wynegar suffered because he got married.

Griffith said other owners, upset at what he called "irresponsible reporting," had suggested legal action.

"I would like to feel," he said, "that I am a big enough person to accept any criticism I deserve and put this matter to rest with public and private apologies.

Hot Breakers Top Wranglers

By Canadian Press

Seattle Breakers scored four power-play goals Tuesday night as they crushed Calgary Wranglers 8-5 in one of two games played in the Western Hockey League.

A goal midway through the final period by Mike Winther gave Medicine Hat Tigers a 4-3 decision over Saskatoon Blades in the other major junior game.

In Seattle, the Breakers scored four times in the first period and took a 5-0 lead into the final 20 minutes.

Errol Rausse and Len Dies each scored two goals for Seattle, while Brian Graves, Tom Marsh, Joe Ward and Ryan Hatfield added the others.

Calgary got two goals from Sheldon Currie and singles from Kelly Kisio, Gary Slecak and Rocky Greenwood.

The Wranglers have yet to win a game — Calgary has one tie in four starts — while the Breakers opened their schedule on a winning note.

In Medicine Hat, Winther scored the winning goal at 10:05 of the third period. The win was the first for Medicine Hat in three starts.

Goals by the Tigers' Steve Tsujiura and the Blades' Terry Paskaruk tied the teams at 1-1 after one period, but Rod Van Slyke netted a pair in the second to give the Tigers a 3-1 lead.

Lindsey Carson and Ken Federko scored early in the third to lift Saskatoon into a 3-3 tie before Winther netted the winner.

Soviet Star Dead at 26

MOSCOW (AP) — Alexander Belov, who scored the controversial last-second basket in the Soviet Union's gold-medal basketball victory over the United States in the 1972 Olympic Games, has died after a prolonged illness, the Soviet news agency Tass said Tuesday. He was 26.

The nature of Belov's illness was not disclosed, but Soviet sources said Belov died of cancer.

TWO GAMES IN BIG SIX

Two games herald the opening of a new South Island Big Six Intermediate Hockey League season on two fronts tonight.

Esquimalt Maple Leafs face Western Homes Buckaroos at 8:25 in Pearkes Arena and the newly-formed Duncan Blades tackle Juan de Fuca Merchants at 9 at Juan de Fuca Arena.

In an exhibition game Saturday, Bucks are scheduled to take on the Parksville Golden Eagles at 8 p.m. in Panorama Leisure Centre in Sidney.

HORNETS SET STAGE FOR BATTLE

Saanich Hornets blanked Oak Bay Farmer Construction 20-0 Tuesday to set the stage for a first-place battle in the Vancouver Island Juvenile Football League.

Hornets have won four out of five games — all by shutouts — and now face Cowichan Timbermen in Duncan on Sunday. Timbermen are unbeaten with seven points from four games.

Tom Graham led the Hornet offence with two touchdowns while Kim Munroe scored one major and kicked two converts.

Coaches on Mat

NEW YORK (AP) — Coaches Fred Shero of New York Rangers and Bob McCammon of Philadelphia Flyers will meet with John Ziegler here today as the National Hockey League president continues his inquiry into the teams' bench-clearing brawl during an exhibition game last week.

The 21-minute fight, which resulted in the ejection of seven Flyers and five Rangers, produced more than $5,000 in fines and caused the suspension of left winger Frank Beaton of the Rangers for the first regular-season game in which he participates. Beaton was judged to have been first to leave his bench to become involved.

No further disciplinary action will be taken against the clubs, said an informed source. The aim of the meeting will be to prevent further such incidents from taking place.

Colt Brings Record Price

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — A standardbred record price of $290,000 was paid for a colt by Meadow Skipper in Tuesday's session of the Tattersall yearling sale here.

The yearling, out of Lady Emily, was purchased by Leon and Lorraine Machiz of Great Neck, N.Y. The price broke the record of $260,000 paid last year for the Meadow Skipper colt Escape Artist.

The five highest-priced standardbred yearlings of all time are sons of Meadow Skipper.

Favored Yugoslavians Too Much For Canada

MANILA (CP) — Yugoslavia handed Canada its first setback at the world basketball championships today, scoring a 105-95 victory.

The win left Yugoslavia unbeaten in three games while Canada was left with a 2-1 record. Both teams had already clinched a berth in the eight-team semi-final round.

The Canadians started well with 18-year-old guard-forward Leo Rautins of Toronto hitting consistently from outside. After 12 minutes, Canada was up by one when a technical foul was called on Jim Zoet of Port Perry, Ont., for holding on to the basket rim.

The foul seemed to unsettle the Canadians and the more experienced Yugoslavians began to outrebound them at both ends of the court.

Yugoslavia took a 55-47 lead at the half while Canada already had three starters, including Rautins, in foul trouble.

The Canadian hopes all but disappeared with less that four minutes remaining when, with Yugoslavia ahead 91-79, Rautins fouled out. He finished with 30 points, including 22 in the first half.

Canadian captain Martin Riley of Winnipeg had 11 points and Doc Ryan of Montreal added 10.

"The things that hurt us were our rebounding and foul trouble," said Canadian coach Jack Donohue.

Nikolic Aleksander, coach of the Yugoslav team which took the silver medal in the 1976 Olympics, said he felt Canada was a very good club, capable of taking the bronze medal at this championship.

Today's action closed out play in the preliminary round.

Yugoslavia finished first in Group A with a 3-0 record. Canada was second with 2-1. South Korea was third at 1-2 and Senegal last at 0-3.

South Korea nipped Senegal 86-84 in overtime today for its lone win.

In Group B play, Italy beat China 125-95 to finish second behind Brazil and qualify for the semi-final round. Brazil defeated Puerto Rico 100-88. Brazil was 3-0, Italy 2-1, Puerto Rico 1-2 and China 0-3.

In Group C play, Czechoslovakia edged the Dominican Republic 82-81 to finish third behind the U.S. and Australia.

Playing in the championship semi-final round are: Canada, Yugoslavia, Brazil, Italy, U.S., Australia, defending-champion Soviet Union and the Philippines as host country.

The championship round begins Friday.

CUBAN CLEARED FOR ALI SERIES

CHICAGO (AP) — Teofilo Stevenson, two-time Olympic heavyweight boxing champion, has received permission from the Cuban government to fight Muhammad Ali in a five-city series in the United States, it was announced at a news conference Tuesday.

"It depends on Ali and the TV networks for it to come off," said Bob Arum, chairman of the board of Top Rank Inc., a promotion firm which has handled many of Ali's previous fights.

Arum's announcemnent was made in office of Ali's manager, Herbert Muhammad.

"I spoke to Muhammad about it on the telephone, but that's all," Herbert Muhammad said. "He told me, 'This will be really a biggie.'"

Arum said that all five bouts would be three-round matches and that Top Rank would "co-ordinate" the entire program.

"They wouldn't technically be exhibitions and they wouldn't technically be championship fights," Arum said. "The format is a device to enable Stevenson to retain his amateur championship. Our plan is to involve Madison Square Garden, the Los Angeles Forum and three other locations. Possibly, Chicago will be one of them."

Arum said Stevenson would not be paid for the matches but the Cuban Boxing Federation would receive a sum of money for his participation.

Player Restrictions Necessary

ST. LOUIS (AP) — National Football League players should not be given unrestricted freedom to accept contract offers from other clubs, the U.S. Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals has ruled.

In a ruling stemming from a class action suit by NFL players, Chief Judge Floyd Gibson wrote that restrictions on player movement among teams are necessary to assure balance in the league.

"While some freedom of movement after playing out a contract is in order, complete freedom of movement would result in the best franchises acquiring most of the top players," Gibson said.

A spokesman for the NFL owners called Gibson's statement a landmark ruling on the propriety of restricting player movement.

"We feel this is a very important statement," said Rusty Martin, administrative co-ordinator for the league's management council. "It is the kind of thing the league has been saying all along."

Gibson upheld a settlement reached in U.S. District Court involving a class action suit brought on behalf of all former and present NFL players in which the players were awarded more than $13 million in damages.

The district court had ruled that the Rozelle Rule, in which teams were compensated for players they lost to other clubs, was a violation of anti-trust laws. The league then adopted another, more complicated, system for awarding compensation in such cases.

The players, arguing that the NFL's new rule is more restrictive than the Rozelle Rule, appealed the settlement.

But Gibson ruled that the present compensation rule was fair and necessary. He said an average of 84 players per year have played out their options since the two-year-old present rule was adopted, while an average of 16 did so in the 11 years under the Rozelle Rule.

Arrowsmith Ski Area Expanding Facilities

Skiiers on Vancouver Island will have some new territory to try their skills on this coming season.

And, suprisingly enough, the extra runs are at Mt. Arrowsmith.

This mountain near Port Alberni hasn't had a good season since opening three years ago — a lack of snow at the lower elevations serviced by the initial chairlift has curtailed operations drastically.

Last season they were open for less than a week.

But, when the going got tough, Port Alberni skiers just dug in a little deeper.

During the summer, the ski facility managed to raise $125,000 through sale of $500 memberships and is now in the process of installing two 2,000-foot long T-Bars to reach the base of Cokely Ridge.

These lifts will add 1,000 vertical feet to the mountain and reach into the sub-alpine area which has received sufficient amounts of snow during the past three seasons.

The new lifts are scheduled to be in place within three weeks, bringing the total vertical distance of the hill to around 2,000 feet with runs of up to two miles in length.

In addition, Arrowsmith is the only area on the Island that isn't raising its fee structure this season. Day passes will still cost $7.

Forbidden Plateau skiiers won't find much change on the hill. Operators have concentrated strictly on grooming activities during the summer and the day-use fee has gone up from $6 to $7.

Once again, Green Mountain operators promise better access this season. Crown Zellerbach will be handling snow removal and the company is in the process of "sprucing up" the road to help make the task a little easier.

A fair amount of much-needed cleanup work has been done on Green this summer because the operators want to start packing the snow sooner than usual. It tends to last a little longer when packing starts at six inches rather than three feet in depth. Ticket prices have increased from $7 to $7.50.

Mt. Washington, the new area currently under construction northwest of Courtenay, won't open this season.

It's scheduled to be operational in the 1979-80 season.

To date, the ski company has just about finished pouring the foundations for the two initial chair lifts and is working on the parking lots, which will have a capacity of 600 cars and 20 buses. Because of the heavy snowfall in the area, it's not likely much more will be completed this fall.

Next summer, the Mt. Washington operators plan to finish up the lift system and construct the day lodge. The road network for the ski village is complete and sales of lots might start this spring.

NIBBLES: Integrated resource planning is starting to pay off in the Gang Ranch area of the Cariboo . . . Several years ago, sections of land were being turned into desert because the native bunchgrass was being overgrazed by cattle each spring . . . Bill Otway, executive-director of the B.C. Wildlife Federation, took a trip through the region recently and reports the vegetation is starting to come back under the integrated planning of the grazing division of the provincial forest service . . . I just hope the rest of the province-wide total of 18 million acres said to be inflicted by this corrosive process in the East Kootenays, Grand Forks area, Okanagan-Similkameen basin and Nicola-Thompson area is doing as well.

Gordie Still Tops On Detroit Ice

By Canadian Press

Gordie Howe still wows 'em in Detroit.

It was as if the final game of the Stanley Cup playoffs were up for grabs Tuesday night at Olympia Stadium.

More than 14,000 persons crowded into the 14,700-seat arena, primarily for one reason: Gordie Howe.

The legendary former National Hockey League superstar with Detroit — now wearing the colors of the World Hockey Association's New England Whalers — was playing at Olympia for the first time since he retired from the Red Wings after the 1970—71 season.

And his sons Mark and Marty also were on hand for the exhibition game between the two teams from rival leagues.

Fans with split loyalties couldn't have asked for more: Detroit won 7-5 and Gordie scored a goal — with assists from Mark and Marty.

New York Islanders thrashed Toronto Maple Leafs 7-4, and Los Angeles Kings blasted St. Louis Blues 7-2 in NHL contests. In other games, Quebec Nordiques of the WHA blanked Pittsburgh Penguins of the NHL 3-0, Minnesota North Stars of the NHL dumped Edmonton Oilers of the WHA 4-2, Birmingham Bulls of the WHA defeated Philadelphia Firebirds of the American Hockey League 5-2 and Maine Mariners of the AHL humiliated Washington Capitals of the NHL, 7-1.

Banners blaring "Welcome Home Gordie!" hung from the balcony as Howe took the ice for pre-game warmups. The 50-year-old rightwing got a thunderous standing ovation.

It was even louder when he scored his goal at 4:47 of the third period, skating around Detroit defenceman Perry Miller and firing a wrist shot from the circle to the left of goalie Rogie Vachon.

When the game ended, the boistrous fans chanted, "GOR-deee, GOR-deee, GOR-deee," and pounded the glass at rinkside waiting for him to answer their shouts and come back for a bow.

But he never came out for an encore and, after 15 minutes, the crowd booed and went home.

"I just couldn't get back out," Howe said. "There was a hell of a crowd out there."

Howe was in his 12th season with the Red Wings when Willie Huber was born in Germany in 1958. Huber, Detroit's No. 1 draft choice, scored two goals against the Whalers and assisted on another.

Nick Libett, Dale McCourt, Vaclav Nedomansky, Errol Thompson and Paul Woods scored the other Detroit goals. Mike Rogers, George Lyle, Dave Keon and John McKenzie scored the other New England goals.

Mt. Douglas Still Unbowed

Mt. Douglas blanked St. Margarets 3-0 Tuesday to remain unbeaten on top of the first division of the Greater Victoria High School Girls' Field Hockey League.

It was the sixth straight victory for Mt. Doug.

Oak Bay moved into second place by edging Spectrum 2-1 and Norfolk House tripped Victoria High 1-0 in other games.

In second division play, unbeaten Parkland stayed in front by blanking Dunsmuir 6-0 while Belmont nipped Mt. Douglas 1-0 and St. Michael's clipped Claremont, 3-1.

Scoring:

FIRST DIVISION

Mt. Douglas 3 (Nancy Charlton 2, Andrea Anderson); St. Margarets 0.

Oak Bay 2 (Cathie Caven, Donna Shorting); Spectrum 1 (Bonnie Hutton).

SECOND DIVISION

Claremont 1 (Brenda Robinson); St. Michaels 3 (Caroline Lamb 3).

Mt. Douglas 0; Belmont 1 (Irene Dyer).

Dunsmuir 0; Parklands 6 (Janet Ruest 2, Gillian Poole, Cheryl Heber, Michelle Williams, Sue Wickstrom).

Spectrum Wins

Spectrum enhanced its record by bouncing winless Stelly's 8-0 in Greater Victoria High School Boys' Soccer League play Tuesday.

The win moved Spectrum, which now has a 5-0 record, ahead of Mt. Douglas — the only other unbeaten league team.

Steve Newman and Larry Jacobs each scored twice to lead the Spectrum attack and Mark Jackson, Josu Irureta-goyena, Brent Gelaudi and Mike Cathcart added singles.

Franchise Shift Gets Approval

CHICAGO (AP) — The board of directors of the North American Soccer League approved Tuesday the sale of the Colorado franchise that will be shifted to Atlanta.

The Atlanta group that purchased the franchise was headed by Dick Cecil and his partner Al Thornwell.

Cecil originally owned a NASL Atlanta franchise in 1968 that went out of business after two years. Cecil's coach at that time was Phil Woosnam, who now is commissioner of the league.

The team will be known as Atlanta Chiefs and will play its games in Atlanta-Fulton county stadium, a 55,000-seat facility where the baseball Braves and football Falcons also operate.

The board also retained the existing 30-game season with 15 games at home and 15 on the road, and it also retained the system used for breaking ties.

MONTREAL CP) — J. Cooper Smeaton, a trustee of the Stanley Cup since 1946 and a member of the Hockey Hall of Fame, died Tuesday of a heart attack at Royal Victoria Hospital. He was 88.

Born in 1890, Smeaton was named to the officiating staff of the National Hockey Association, forerunner of the National Hockey League, in 1913. He later served as the NHL's referee-in-chief until his retirement in 1937. He was elected to the Hall of Fame in 1961.

Notts Forest Aims at League Unbeaten Mark

LONDON (AP) — English League soccer champions Nottingham Forest go into Saturday's match with Wolverhampton Wanderers poised to rewrite the record books.

Last Saturday's 2-1 victory over Aston Villa equalled Leeds United's record of 34 league matches without a defeat, and with Wolverhampton struggling at the bottom of the standings, Brian Clough's team will start as overwhelming favorites to break the record.

Nottingham's 34-game streak is a remarkable one. This season, the team has only found real rhythm twice, leaving it five points behind league leaders Liverpool, which has dropped just one point in eight games.

Saturday, Liverpool's unbeaten record will be put on the line at Norwich.

These two teams are the highest scoring in Division I, both averaging more than two goals a game. With Norwich unbeaten at home, Liverpool will need to be in top gear.

With Martin Peters and John Ryan providing plenty of chances for the Norwich front line, the Liverpool defence may be under more pressure than usual.

Second-place Everton, which trails Liverpool by two points, is at home to Southampton.

Stoke and Brighton Impressive Winners

LONDON (Reuter) — Stoke and Brighton, among the pacemakers in Division II of the Englich League scored impressive away soccer wins in the third round of the Soccer League Cup.

Unbeaten Stoke, which six years ago won the Cup—the junior rival to the Football Association FA Cup but carrying, equally, a passport to European competition for the holder—won 3-1 at Northampton, thanks to two second half goals.

Brighton, with an early goal from Teddy Maybank, was never in trouble against Division II rival Burnley. England under-21 striker Peter Ward scored in each half and a consolation goal by Ian Brennan was sandwiched between them.

Division I clubs, although avoiding the humiliation that struck several of the previous round, made heavy weather of their tasks. Only a second half goal by Martin Dobson carried second-placed Everton through against Division IV visitor, Darlington.

Queen's Park Rangers beat Division III Swansea—conqueror of Tottenham, Argentines and all, in round two—2-0. In the night's only all-Division I clash, a goal by Southampton's England reject Phil Boyer knocked out Derby.

Move Shelved

COLWYN BAY, Wales (Reuter) — A motion proposing a British boycott of the 1980 Moscow Olympics was withdrawn Tuesday at a meeting of Britain's government-appointed sports council.

Council member Laddie Lucas, who presented the motion, withdrew it when it was pointed out that Prime Minister James Callaghan had said he felt the question of any action on the Moscow Olympics should be left to the British Olympic Association and the various sports federations.

Lucas said he had put the motion before the council to draw attention to the treatment of dissidents in the Soviet Union.

Nattrass Wins Fourth World Title

SEOUL (Reuter) — Susan Nattrass of Waterloo, Ont., won her fourth world trapshooting championship today, scoring a record 195 out of a possible 200 in the women's trap event at the world shooting championships.

It was the second year in a row that the 27-year-old former Edmonton resident had set a world record. She won the 1977 world women's trap title with a score of 192.

She also won the world title in 1974 and 1975.

Today, her nearest rival was Wander Gentiletti of Italy who was second with a score of 185.

It was Canada's second medal. On Monday, Robert Cheyne of Burnaby won a silver in the free rifle 300-metre standing position event.

UVIC HOOP COACH CONFIDENT DESPITE LOSS OF LOOS, HIGGINS

Once on Top, You Can't Aim Any Lower

By JIM CRERAR
Times Staff

Okay, Ken Shields, so you coached UVic Vikings to a basketball championship last year. Now what do you do?

"Once you finish first," he replied, "if you aim any lower you're liable to get fired."

Canadian college sports don't operate in a pressure cooker so Shields isn't likely to be pink-slipped regardless of where the Vikings finish this winter in the Canada West University Athletic Association men's league.

Even so, the third-year Viking coach feels his squad has a chance to repeat as CWUAA champs despite the loss of Billy Loos, the leading scorer in the league last year as well as its most valuable player. Loos is sitting out the season and living in Burnaby.

Then there's the case of guard Craig Higgins from Oak Bay, who devloped a chronic inflamation of the knee during the summer and hasn't been able to work out.

"It would be a severe blow if we lose Higgins," said Shields. "He was great in the back court — a poised type of player and a fine offensive threat. We're still hoping we won't lose him, but at this point he's not playing."

So why the optimism?

"We have four of the five first-team B.C. high school all-stars from last year," the coach explained.

"We definitely don't have the dimension Loos gave us as an outside scorer and rebounder," he admitted. "But depending on how the young kids come along, we could be very strong by the end of the year. We definitely have more depth, especially at forward."

The "kids" include the three Kazanowski brothers from last year's provincial champion Nanaimo high school team — Gerald, 17, and twins Greg and John, 19.

Gerald, a six-foot-eight forward, was the B.C. high school tournament MVP last spring and made the national junior team this summer.

"He's the best big freshman I've had in 10 years of coaching college basketball," Shields said.

Greg and John are both guards and are six-foot-one identical twins. John was chosen to the high school all-star first team and Greg to the second team.

The other two first-team all-stars are Oak Bay forwards Ken Kirzinger and Kelly Dukeshire, both 6'6". Kirzinger has been a provincial all-star three years running and two years ago was voted most valuable in the high school finals.

Shields also has six-foot-five Nanaimo forward Paul Davis in tow who, he said, "played in the shadow of the Kazanowskis and probably didn't get the recognition he deserved."

Besides Loos and possibly Higgins, Vikings will number among the missing Lorne Dakin, a forward from Terrace who did not return to UVic this year; guard Grant Boland from Oak Bay, who has a year of eligibility left but has opted instead to coach UVic Jayvees, and Brian Sutherland-Brown, who is concentrating on studies for a master's degree.

Returning are fifth-year guard Robbie Parris, a CWUAA all-star last year; six-foot-eight forward Reni Dolcetti, a fourth-year starter who played for Shields at Laurentian University in Sudbury; Ian Hyde-Lay, a fourth-year starting guard who must overcome a cartilege injury; starting forward Chris Hebb of Prince Rupert, another fourth-year man; Mickey Welder, a fourth-year guard from Kelowna who is battling Hyde-Lay for the other backcourt position next to Parris, and forwards Ted Anderson of Port Alberni, a third-year player, and Gary Budd of Victoria who was knocked out last season by a knee operation.

Shields looks to Saskatchewan Huskies to be the league's most improved team under new coach Guy Vetrie, whom Shields coached at Laurentian. Vetrie has recruited heavily in Ontario, including 6'6" Murray Hall from last year's Laurentian team.

Calgary Dinosaur coach Gary Howard has lost all but Eric Duerkson and Jeff Thompson from last season's second-place team but Pat Lee, an all-star two years ago, is back.

UBC finished third last year under Peter Mullins and has lost forward Mark Aldilman. A newcomer who should make the T-Birds competitive is guard Ian McKinnon, up from UBC Jayvees.

Gary Smith is back as coach of the Alberta Golden Bears as is John Affleck with Lethbridge Pronghorns.

Smith has Oak Bay's Don Horwood studying for a master's degree at Alberta, as his assistant.

Vikings open their season with a pair of exhibition games at McKinnon Gym against the Victoria Data Tech Senior "A" squad Oct. 27 and 28 and play UBC in their first league encounters at McKinnon Nov. 10 and 11.

Heiler-Moore In Narrow Victory

Holly Heiler and Joan Moore of Cedar Hill had the closest battle as play moved into the semi-final round of the Victoria and District women's foursomes golf championship at Uplands Golf Club, Tuesday.

The Heiler-Moore pairing defeated Lois Smith and Liz Haas of Victoria Golf Club on the 18th hole.

In other quarter-final action, Eileen Clairmonte and Barbara Ricketts of Gorge Vale defeated Margaret Mayhew and Nan Cole of Victoria 5 and 4; Edna Hay and Gerry Baillie of Glen Meadows downed Bernie Davies and Irene MacFarlane of Glen Meadows 4 and 3, and Tommy Elmsley and Midge Cole of Ardmore edged Leonore Robertson and Marg Fry of Gorge Vale 2 and 1.

In consolation play, May Fortune and Pat Leahy of Cedar Hill defeated Verle McKeown and Jocelyn Parsons of Gorge Vale 2 and 1; Muriel Twite and Anne Gillespie of Glen Meadows won from Joan Miller and Ruth McKay of Cedar Hill 2 and 1; Joan Withers and Libby Hemmons of Cedar Hill defeated Joan Young and Lorraine Genn of Cedar Hill 3 and 2.

Next round is scheduled at Victoria Golf Club, Thursday, with the finals slated Friday at Royal Colwood.

Wade in Hospital

MONTREAL (CP) — Quarterback Sonny Wade, who returned to play Sunday after knee surgery, entered hospital Tuesday night as a precaution against infection, Montreal Alouettes of the Canadian Football League said Tuesday.

Larson Scores Three As Blues Blank Gulls

Wayne Larsen took care of all the scoring chores Tuesday as Saanich Blades opened their South Vancouver Island Junior "B" Hockey League campaign with a 3-0 shutout over Juan de Fuca Gulls at Pearkes Arena.

Larsen scored goals at 9:51 and 19:23 of the first period and added the last at 14:55 of the second frame.

Marty Wakelyn recorded the shutout with 25 saves in the Saanich net.

Wanted: A New UVic Image

University of Victoria teams may have a new look about them in the next couple of months.

UVic is sponsoring a contest to establish a new athletic logo — and if necessary a new team name to replace Vikings and Vikettes — running until Nov. 17. It's open to anyone, whether involved with the university or not, and entries are to be submitted to Ken Shields, co-ordinator of athletics, UVic, Box 1700, Victoria, V8W 2Y2.

The logo must be in color (current colors are blue and gold) and the name and logo should evoke a modern, aggressive athletic image.

Rangers Trade Bonds to Indians

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Texas Rangers sent outfielder Bobby Bonds and relief pitcher Len Barker to Cleveland Indians in an American League baseball trade Tuesday in exchange for relief pitcher Jim Kern and utility infielder Farrell Blanks.

Bonds, who batted .267, led the Rangers with 31 home runs this season and stole 43 bases. The trade had been rumored in recent weeks, but Bonds had threatened not to show up if traded to the Indians.

Barker, 1-5, had a 4.82 ERA for the Rangers, and Kern, 10-10, finished with a 3.08 ERA for Cleveland. Blanks hit .254 for Cleveland in 70 games this season with two home runs.

The Rangers also announced they were giving Cleveland two minor league players to complete a Sept. 2 deal in which outfielder John Grubb came to Texas. The Indians will get outfielder Dave Rivera from Tulsa and pitcher Bobby Cuellar from Tucson.

Life in Hong Kong in Year of the Horse

HONG KONG (Reuter) — Shatin, Hong Kong's multi-million dollar racecourse built on a spectacular spit of reclaimed land, opens for business Saturday.

Jutting out into a bay, it is fringed on three sides by rolling hills in one of Hong Kong's valleys. Down the back straight the horses charge past Chinese junks sailing into the little fishing village opposite.

For Hong Kong's thousands of fanatical gamblers, Shatin is a new mecca.

Jaded by years of watching their horses go around the tight Happy Valley track, they now have a true galloping course as an exciting alternative.

And the jockeys—who often include distinguished visitors such as Britain's Pat Eddery and Lester Piggott—will be able to experiment with riding tactics around the 1,880-metre oval circuit that are impossible at Happy Valley.

Suitable development land here is like gold dust. So the Royal Hong Kong Jockey Club, which gives a large slice of its vast betting turnover to charity projects, decided to move mountains to create a new track.

Trucks trundled across Shatin and dropped their loads into the sea every seven or eight seconds. Within 27 months, 16 million tons had been splashed into place.

Working feverishly to meet its own self-imposed deadline of Oct. 7, 1978, the club then had to pump 1 million tons of marine mud from the track, still settling into place today and likely to sink slowly for some time.

At Happy Valley, fringed by skyscrapers on densely populated Hong Kong Island, the horses are stabled in multi-storey blocks.

At Shatin, set in the rural New Territories, they have air-conditioned stalls with piped music to soothe their nerves and a huge swimming pool in which to work off their aches and paints.

Club officials were reticent about the cost. But they admit reclamation cost $27 million. Surplus land at the end of the course, worth at least $100 million, was handed over to the government.

None of Hong Kong's 750 horses, imported from Australia, New Zealand, Ireland Britain, would set the tracks of the world alight with their brilliance.

But with the addition of a new racecourse, winter visits by international jockeys and new top-class trainers from Australia and Britain, the standard of Hong Kong racing is rising.

Shatin has a united nations flavor with an Australian totalisator system, English photo-finish equipment and a startling innovation for Asia—a huge screen where spectators can get a close-up view of all the action down the back straight.

After all the trials and tribulations, Shatin opens on time in the Chinese calendar's Year of the Horse.

Playoff Format Same As NHL Set to Open

MONTREAL (CP) — The National Hockey League's 62nd season, which opens next Wednesday, Oct. 11, will end April 8 and feature 17 teams playing a total of 680 games, the league office announced Tuesday.

Because of the assimilation of Cleveland Barons by Minnesota North Stars, the league will have an odd number of teams for the first time since the 1941-42 season, after which Brooklyn Americans retired to leave the NHL at six teams.

The odd number means that there will be no date this season on which all teams are in action.

An innovation this season will be a one-week suspension of regular play Feb. 6-12 to permit a three-game series for a new trophy, the Challenge Cup, between an NHL all-star team and a group of stars from the Soviet Union.

The games will be played at Madison Square Garden, home of New York Rangers, and the starting lineup for the NHL squad will be determined by a vote among fans. Dates for the international games are Feb. 8, 10 and 11.

Of the 180 dates covering the schedule, there are only 22 open dates, including those for the Challenge Cup. As has been recent practice, there are no games scheduled Dec. 24-25.

Each club will play 80 games. There are 182 games on Saturdays, 134 on Wednesdays, 127 on Sundays, 94 on Thursdays, 79 on Tuesdays, 47 on Fridays and 17 on Mondays.

The playoff system remains the same as last season. The top two teams in each of the four divisions qualify for the playoffs, along with the four teams with the most points among the rest.

The North Stars will play in the Adams Division this season with Boston Bruins, Buffalo Sabres and Toronto Maple Leafs, thus taking the place of Cleveland. The Smythe Division, where the North Stars were slotted last season, becomes a four-team division as are the Adams and Patrick groups, leaving the Norris Division as the only five-team section.

Opening-night games are Minnesota at Montreal Canadiens, Toronto at Pittsburgh Penguins, Colorado Rockies at Vancouver Canucks, Atlanta Flames at Chicago Black Hawks, Washington Capitals at Los Angeles Kings and St. Louis Blues at Detroit Red Wings.

Clark Winner Of Tough Rally

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — British rally champion Roger Clark officially has been confirmed as winner of the gruelling 1,488-kilometre (930-mile) Cyprus rally, driving a works-entered Ford Escort RS. A similar car driven by Cypriot Christos Kirmitsis placed second in official results of the rally, so tough that only 12 of the 44 starters managed to finish.

ONE MORE CHANCE TO GAIN EXEMPTION

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gil Morgan, winner of the $100,000 first prize Sunday in the World Series of Golf, moved from 10th to second on the PGA tour money-winning list with $267,459 for the year.

Money-leader Tom Watson, who finished third in the tournament at Akron, Ohio, received $19,000 and established an all-time tour record with $362,429. That surpassed Johnny Miller's 1974 mark of $353,021.

Andy Bean is third this year with $264,090, followed by Jack Nicklaus, $256,672; Hubert Green, $247,406; Lee Trevino, $228,723; Hale Irwin, $191,666; Bill Kratzert, $183,683; Gary Player, $177,336, and Jerry Pate, $172,099.

The next tournament, the Pensacola Open in Florida, ends the money race. The top 60 players will receive exemptions from qualifying for 1979 tour events. Lanny Wadkins, with $53,811, is 60th, just behind Danny Edwards's $55,077 and ahead of Don January's $51,979.

Esks Eye All-Time Point Mark

TORONTO (CP) — Edmonton Eskimos are keying on one of the long-standing Canadian Football League records.

The Esks are closing on the all-time season scoring record of 478 points set by the 1956 Montreal Alouettes in 14 games.

Edmonton, scoring at a rate of better than 31 points a game through 12 outings, now have 374 points and need a 26-point average through the remaining four games to equal the 22-year-old mark.

The 1957 Eskimos came closest to it, scoring 475 points.

Dave Cutler of the Edmonton Eskimos holds a wide lead in the CFL scoring race. Cutler has 138 points on 30 field goals, 37 conversions and 11 singles.

In second place is Bernie Ruoff of the Winnipeg Blue Bombers with 118 points on 24 field goals, 29 conversions and 17 singles.

Mike Strickland of Saskatchewan Roughriders leads the rushers with 1,042 yards.

Larry Key of the B.C. Lions is second with 794 yards.

Before the Judge

A 29-year-old Shawnigan Lake man was cleared on a charge of dangerous driving by Judge Fred Green in provincial court Tuesday.

Albert Johannes Vandermeer was charged after a Feb. 19 head-on crash on the Malahat portion of the Trans-Canada Highway, which claimed the lives of 23-year-old James Lawrence Sauer of Vancouver and 24-year-old Susan Jennifer Hamilton of North Vancouver.

The accident, which occurred on a foggy, three-lane stretch of the highway 20 kilometres north of Victoria, involved four vehicles and resulted in a number of injuries.

On April 10, a coroner's jury ruled that Vandermeer and Harvey Ernest Wuerch of 472 Meredith in Victoria were travelling illegally in the northbound lane. Two of the three lanes in that section are for northbound traffic but southbound vehicles may use the centre lane for passing if there is no northbound traffic. Wuerch has also been charged and is facing a trial on a date to be fixed.

Testifying on his own behalf, Vandermeer said there was no approaching traffic when he swung into the middle lane to pass.

Defence lawyer Gerald Sinnott of Campbell River, in his closing argument, asked Green to note that the provincial highways ministry altered the road signs in the area of the accident after the fatal mishap and suggested part of the blame should be placed on that ministry for the inherent defect. Sinnott also said there was no apparent reason why Sauer pulled into the centre lane and contended Sauer had the last clear chance to avoid the accident.

In making his decision, Green said there were a number of facts clear to him: that Vandermeer, at the time he pulled out, had the right to do so and there was no oncoming vehicle in sight; that the oncoming vehicles did come into sight; that Vandermeer then faced a judgmental decision whether to pull back into the southbound lane but decided to maintain his position; and that the vehicle in which the deceased couple were riding pulled out almost immediately in front of Vandermeer.

Green also said he was satisfied the sign and lane situation was "by its very nature, a trap."

In a written judgment, Judge Lance Heard of Duncan dismissed a civil suit brought by an Esquimalt man against a justice of the peace.

Ronald Shingler, 613 Drake, brought the action against Earle Allan Berthiaume, who was ordered Jan. 4 by Mr. Justice J.G. Ruttan of the B.C. Supreme Court to rehear Shingler's complaint against an Esquimalt police constable.

Constable James Askew has been charged with assault causing bodily harm and unlawful confinement and has been committed for higher court trial on the first charge. The preliminary hearing on the second charge is scheduled for Feb. 21.

In his complaint against Berthiaume, Shingler contended the justice of the peace was negligent in wilfully refusing Shingler's application or negligently performing his duties in failing to issue process.

Noting that the Provincial Court Act protects a justice from a claim for damages unless it is proved that he acted in bad faith without reasonable and probable cause, Heard said Berthiaume stated he used his usual procedure and that, "on the material he had before him at the time, it appears that he had reasonable and probable grounds to refuse to issue a summons."

Heard defined bad faith as "to act knowing that what he did was wrong, lacking and deficient."

The judge said he came to the conclusion there was no proof of Berthiaume acting in bad faith.

In an unusual incident, the mother of a 36-year-old man refused to have her son live with her during his release unless her name and address were kept out of print.

Raymond Severny, charged with a Monday break-in at 1121 Yates, appeared before Judge William Ostler for a bail hearing Tuesday morning.

Defence lawyer Chris Considine was beginning to say that he and Crown counsel Richard Law had agreed on Severny's release on his own recognizance, $2,000 surety and on condition that he live with his mother, when a woman walked up toward the bench and said, "I'm his mother. He's not staying with me."

Considine asked that the case be stood down momentarily and stepped outside the courtroom with the woman.

After the consultation, Considine, who elected trial by judge without jury, was able to gain Severny's release on the previously-mentioned conditions and the preliminary hearing was set for March 15, 1979.

Man Jailed for 30 Months In 'Cruel, Brutal Offence'

A 28-year-old Victoria man was sentenced Tuesday by county court Judge E.J.C. Stewart to 30 months in the penitentiary for his part in the robbery and beating of a pizza deliveryman on Vining Street Oct. 30, 1977.

He said David Wayne Tudor was very much involved in the planning and must have anticipated that some violence would be involved but was prepared to let someone else do the dirty work. It was not a very mitigating factor that Tudor himself did not damage the sight of one eye of the deliveryman.

Tudor was one of four persons involved in the $53 robbery with violence crime. A 16-year-old was given probation in juvenile court, a 17-year-old was given a suspended sentence and three years probation in county court and a 21-year-old — the man who wielded the blow — was sentenced in provincial court to 42 months.

"This was a cruel, callous, brutal offence," Stewart said. "I have seen and observed all of those who were involved and I have heard from three of them. I have also seen the victim and heard the result of this attack on him."

He said someone earning an honest living making deliveries is entitled to as much protection as the system can provide.

Stewart said he could understand the court dispositions against the two teen-aged offenders although he wondered about one of them, whom he did not identify, because he noticed no sense of remorse.

There was no question that the 21-year-old who actually struck the blow was a vicious individual and his 42-month sentence was proper.

Crown counsel Peter Birkett, in his submission, suggested Stewart give serious consideration to a penitentiary term — two years or more — as proper and certainly well deserved.

The paramount consideration was not the rehabilitation of Tudor but the protection of the public and deterrence to Tudor and others.

He said Tudor was the eldest of the quartet by a number of years, the initial planning took place in his home, there was no suggestion he was forced into it, he was present when the attack occurred and with the others shared in the proceeds.

It could not be ignored, he added, that the deliveryman suffered grievous bodily harm through permanent partial loss of vision in one eye.

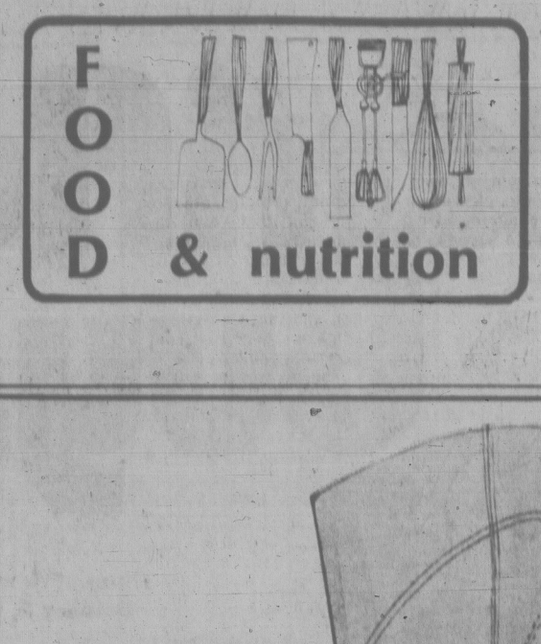
Kay's Dishes Well Tested

The Victoria Times welcomes to its Food and Nutrition section today a new column by Kay Spicer who has been involved in many aspects of the food business since graduating with a bachelor of science degree in home economics from the University of Saskatchewan 25 years ago.

Kay will be contributing a down-to-earth cooking column each Wednesday with every recipe tested in her kitchen laboratory, as well as occasional other columns with cooking and food preparation tips.

In her career in food, Kay has been for five years an independent consultant on home economics, for 2 1/2 years food writer for Chatelaine magazine, adviser to the Ontario Pork Marketing Board, the Holland Cheese Exporters, Canadian Fresh Food and Vegetable Association and other groups. She has been an instructor in family and consumer studies at Humber College and was Canadian co-ordinator for the Pillsbury Bake-off in 1971-72. She is married with three children.

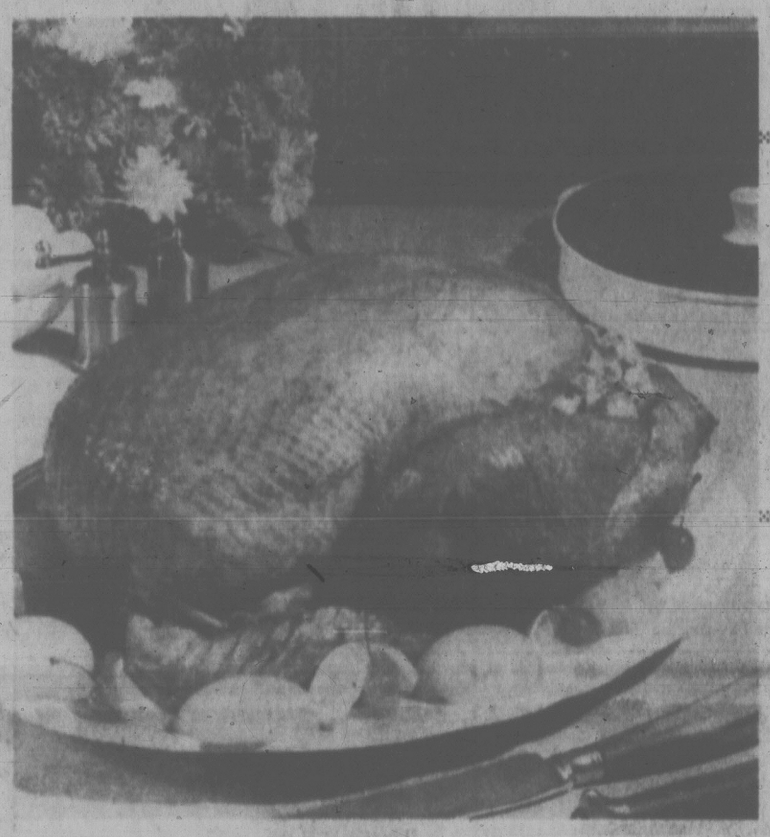
Kay says that through her columns she wants to promote well-balanced diets and good nutrition as well as wise use of the food dollar.



COOKING WITH KAY

Thanksgiving: Turkey Time

By KAY SPICER



Thanksgiving is the time for families to get together for a special feast, and at the centre of the meal is the turkey, crisp-skinned from the oven and bubbling with rich aromas from the stuffing.

Thanksgiving is one of the happiest cooking times for me — as I'm sure it is for most committed cooks. For the past 15 years I've cooked our holiday feast in my tiny but efficient kitchen. The window looks out over the lake fringed with autumn shades from the palest gold to the deepest burgundy and garnished with bunches of evergreen. The air is usually fresh and crisp. What a setting for enjoying the fragrant aroma and wonderful warmth of our festive meal as it cooks.

I know the family anticipates a feast planned around the traditional turkey and pumpkin pie. Every year I seem to make additions. It's so easy to add but difficult to take away so our meal has become a banquet. Also I usually go overboard on the amounts because we all look forward to the left-overs.

Preparation starts on Saturday. That's when I make the pie, put together the sweet potato casserole, the stuffing and relish. I refrigerate them over night. Early on Sunday I fuss with the bird, bake fresh spoon bread, set my table and prepare the vegetables. Then everyone joins me for a long walk in the woods to work up a fantastic appetite. Monday is the second-time around day. Who doesn't like to pick the turkey on day two?

Here's the meal we're going to enjoy with friends this Thanksgiving. I wish you could all join us.

ROAST TURKEY

1 turkey, 12 to 14 pounds
Salt and pepper
Sausage Stuffing
½ cup softened butter

Remove and reserve the turkey giblets. Wipe and dry the bird well. Prepare the stuffing. Season the cavity and skin with salt and pepper. Fill neck cavity lightly with dressing to give a nicely rounded appearance, allowing room for expansion. Close opening by fastening neck skin over back with skewer or by folding wing tips over back. Fill body cavity. Skewer or sew opening closed. Tie wings and legs of bird close to body. Place turkey on a rack in a roasting pan. Brush all over with melted butter. Cover with a tent of aluminum foil left loose at the sides but tucked under the bird at either end. Roast at 325°F for 4½ to 5 hours or until drumstick moves up and down easily. Baste occasionally during cooking, if possible. Remove foil during last hour so turkey browns well. Baste frequently during this hour.

Cooking time is only approximate because the shape and temperature of the bird may cause a decrease or increase in total cooking time. Young fresh turkeys seem to take a shorter cooking time than most cooking schedules provide. If the juices are clear when the bird is pierced with a skewer between the first and second joints of the leg, the turkey is finished. Transfer it to a serving platter and remove trussing strings. Allow cooked turkey to "rest" in a warm place for 20 to 30 minutes before serving to make carving easier. Garnish with greens and canned or fresh fruit, if desired.

TIMELY TIP: Remember birds without stuffing take less time to roast. To estimate roasting time for unstuffed birds, deduct 5 minutes per pound from times for stuffed turkeys.

SAUSAGE STUFFING

1 pound sausage meat
2 medium onions, finely chopped
3-4 stalks celery, finely chopped
1 teaspoon sage
½ teaspoon savory
1 teaspoon seasoned salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
9 cups day-old bread cubes
1 cup chicken or turkey broth

Place sausage meat in large, cold frying pan. Cook slowly for 5 minutes over medium heat, breaking sausage apart with two forks. Add onions and celery. Cook another 3 to 4 minutes or until sausage browns and onion celery are tender. Blend in seasonings. Add bread cubes and broth. Stuff lightly into body and neck cavities of turkey. Yields enough dressing to stuff a 10 to 12 pound turkey.

TURKEY GIBLET GRAVY

Makes 4 cups

1 turkey neck and giblets
1 cup dry white wine
1½ cups water
1 teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon freshly ground pepper
1 medium onion, halved
1 large carrot, cut into inch-long pieces
1 large stalk celery and leaves, cut up
4 sprigs fresh parsley
Juices from turkey roasting pan
1 chicken bouillon cube
6 tablespoons flour
2 teaspoons salt

Place giblets in saucepan with wine, 1½ cups water, salt, pepper, onion, carrot, celery and parsley. Bring to boil for 1 minute. Skim off foam. Lower heat, cover and simmer 1 hour. Strain, reserving broth. Pull meat from neck, discard bones. Chop neck meat and giblets into small pieces. Set aside. When turkey is done and placed on platter, remove rack from pan. Pour pan drippings into a 4-cup measure or bowl.

Let stand until fat rises to top. Skim 6 tablespoons of fat into a medium size saucepan. Skim off and discard remaining fat. Pour reserved broth into roasting pan; stir to deglaze pan and loosen brown bits. Add to meat juice in cup to make 4 cups (add a little water if necessary). Stir in chicken bouillon cube, crushing it to dissolve quickly. Stir flour and salt into fat in saucepan until well blended. Stir in meat juice mixture gradually.

Cook, stirring constantly, until mixture is thickened. Add chopped neck meat and giblets. Cook until heated through. Serve over turkey, dressing and potatoes.

SWEET POTATOES AND APPLE

Makes 8 servings

4 peeled apples, cored and chopped
½ cup chopped celery
½ cup raisins
4 cups mashed cooked sweet potato (two 19-oz. cans sweet potatoes, drained and mashed)
1 teaspoon lemon juice
2 tablespoons butter
½ cup brown sugar
½ cup chopped pecans (2 oz.)
½ teaspoon salt
Grated rind of ½ lemon

Simmer chopped apple, celery and raisins in ½ cup water for 10 minutes until tender. Add mashed sweet potato, lemon juice, cinnamon, butter, brown sugar, pecans, salt and lemon rind. Toss to thoroughly blend. Spoon into a buttered 1½ quart casserole or baking dish. Bake at 325°F for 30 minutes. Delactable with roast turkey, chicken, pork or ham.

NO-COOK CRANBERRY RELISH

Makes 2 cups

1 medium orange
2 cups fresh cranberries
½ cup brown sugar
1 tablespoon sherry or port

Trim slice from each end of orange; cut into quarters. Whirl in covered blender with cranberries, brown sugar and sherry or port until very finely chopped. Chill. Tart and tangy with roast turkey.

Muffins are a Mom's Best Friend

½ cup brown sugar
½ cup wheat germ
½ cup molasses
½ cup oil
2 eggs
1 cup milk
2 cup natural raw bran
1 cup whole wheat flour
½ cup cornmeal
½ cup rolled oats
½ cup soy flour
¼ cup brewers' yeast
½ tsp. salt
2 tsp. baking powder
½ tsp. baking soda
½ cup desiccated coconut
1 cup raisins or chopped dates
2 tsp. vanilla

To make these health muffins, into beater bowl measure the sugar, wheat germ, molasses and oil. (Measure the oil after the molasses to help clean out the measure.) Turn beaters on low and as you measure each remaining ingredient add it, scraping down sides of bowl with rubber scraper two or three times until all listed ingredients are added.

Line muffin tins with paper-cup liners. Neatly spoon batter in until three quarters full, and bake at 400° F. about 13 to 15 minutes. Do not burn them.

Many eat them unbuttered, but some prefer butter on them plus a little ginger marmalade.

NOTE: The generous amount of vanilla completely masks the flavor of the brewers' yeast which is not a popular flavor.

60-MINUTE GOURMET

Season Vital to Vegetables

By PIERRE FRANEY
New York Times

Probably nothing in my childhood impressed me more than the years I served as an apprentice at the then fashionable Restaurant Drouant in Paris. But the things I remember, most vivid is the insistence of the executive chef that a daily — and early-hour — visit to the market (invariably Les Halles) was imperative to a good kitchen.

I was rarely permitted to go with him on those weighty missions, but the notion was instilled in my — and all the other apprentices, of whom there were plenty in those days — that menus should be planned around fresh ingredients, around what is in season.

I thought of this recently when preparing what one of my children calls French hamburgers: a good grade of ground beef well seasoned and served not with ketchup, onion and a pickle on the side but with a fresh tomato sauce. At present, tomatoes are abundant in the markets near where I live, and in my own garden, the basil is still flourishing as monarch among the herbs.

To tell the truth, basil was not all that common in my early kitchen training. It was rarely used in the classic French kitchen, but I have learned to appreciate it in the last few years as one of the finest of all sweet herbs.

It is excellent, I find, in flavoring those French hamburgers as well as the tomato sauce that accompanies them. Both these dishes can be prepared leisurely and with time left over even if you are working against an hour's deadline. An excellent accompaniment for the dish is another vegetable in season, carrots, cooked in a simple cream sauce. The carrots can be sliced in seconds, using an electric slicer (such as the slicing blade of a food processor). In any event, assemble and slice all the ingredients for each recipe before starting to cook. You will save time.

BIFTECK HACHE AU BASILIQUE
(Ground beef patties with basil)

1½ pounds ground beef
1 tablespoon butter
¼ cup finely chopped onion
¼ cup fine fresh bread crumbs
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste.
1 tablespoon coarsely chopped fresh basil
2 tablespoons cold water
1 teaspoon peanut, vegetable or corn oil
Fresh tomato sauce with basil (see recipe).

1. Put the meat in a mixing bowl.

2. Heat the butter and add the onion. Cook until wilted. Let cool briefly.

3. Add the onion to the meat. Add the crumbs, salt, pepper, basil and water. Divide the mixture into four portions and flatten into round shapes like hamburgers. Sprinkle with salt and pepper.

4. Place the hamburgers on a grill or heat a lightly oiled skillet and add the hamburgers. Cook until nicely browned on the bottom. Turn and cook until browned on the other side. Continue cooking to the desired degree of doneness.

5. Spoon the hot tomato sauce on a platter and arrange the hamburgers on top.

Yield: 4 servings.

TOMATO SAUCE WITH BASIL

4 large, red, ripe, unblemished tomatoes, about one and three-quarters pounds
3 tablespoons butter
½ teaspoon finely chopped garlic
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste, 2 tablespoons coarsely chopped fresh basil.

1. Peel and core the tomatoes and cut then into one-inch cubes. There should be about four cups.

2. Heat two tablespoons of the butter in a skillet and add the garlic and onion. Cook until wilted. Add the tomatoes, salt and pepper and cook five minutes.

3. Swirl in the remaining butter and stir in the basil.

Yield: 4 servings.

CAROTTES A LA CREME
(Carottes in cream sauce)

6 to 8 large carrots, about one and a half pounds
2 tablespoons butter
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
½ cup heavy cream.

1. Trim and peel the carrots, and, using a sharp knife or a slicer or a food processor, cut the carrots into thin slices, about an eighth of an inch thick. There should be about five cups.

2. Heat the butter in a heavy, deep skillet and adda the carrots and salt and pepper to taste. The skillet must have a thick bottom because the carrots will cook without liquid and otherwise will burn.

3. Cover closely and cook eight minutes. Stir and shake the skillet as the carrots cook. When the carrots are tender, add the cream. Cook about eight to 10 minutes longer or until the carrots are tender but not mushy. The sauce should be slightly absorbed and somewhat thickened.

Yield: 4 servings.

Most people who have a vegetable garden wait until they have a severe case of insects before they apply insecticides, says an entomologist. Often this is too late because plant injury is already done. He advises inspecting your entire garden at least once a week. At the first sign of harmful insects, start getting rid of the bugs.

So your carpeting's treated with a soil-retardant? That doesn't mean it won't eventually need cleaning. If you do it yourself, a major soil-retardant chemical maker recommends steam cleaning or using a dry power cleaner. They won't leave as much detergent residue in the carpet to attract more soil and mask the retardant's chemical protection. (That's why it's also important to rinse out all detergent on soil-protected upholstered furniture.)

eating right

Two months ago, we answered a question from a reader on whether or not it would be advisable to eat raw milk cheese. We said, "We would never trust anything that is made from unpasteurized milk." We would not eat any product that is made from raw milk, nor would we drink raw milk, or order a steak tartare at a restaurant. Regardless of how many assurances we receive, we just do not consider it wise to take chances on the safety of the food we eat.

Many readers wrote us to assure us that raw milk cheese, if properly stored, is safe. Professor D. M. Irvine of the University of Guelph, was among those who wrote to us; he said, "There is absolutely no danger in consuming cheese made from unpasteurized milk if the cheese is cured at a temperature of 35 degree F for a period of at least 60 days."

Professor Irvine referred to the Food and Drug Regulations, which we quote here:

B.08.044 No person shall sell cheese that is not made from a pasteurized source unless it has been stored.

B.08.033 In this division, when used in relation to cheese, the expression . . . "stored" means to have kept, held or stored, cheese at a temperature of 35 degree F or more for a period of 60 days or more from the date of the beginning of the manufacturing process;

The Food and Drug Regulations require the manufacturer to mark or label the cheese with the date of manufacturing and to record that date along with other information for the inspectors to see. However, there is no requirement for dating the small packages of cheese consumers buy from the stores.

Professor Irvine went on to assure us, "Canada has the most rigid bacteriological standards for food of any country in the world. Our raw milk cheddar cheese has been made in Canada for over 100 years. Millions of pounds of fine Canadian raw milk cheddar cheese have been sent to Britain, the U.S. and all over the world. There is certainly no problem with eating properly stored raw milk cheddar cheese."

Cheese possesses one advantage which helps in achieving an excellent public health record. The presence of natural inhibitory substances arising from the lactic acid fermentation process supresses pathogenic bacteria.

The safety factor is greater in ripened cheese because of the low moisture, lack of air, high acidity, the chemical changes produced by ripening and the high salt.

He concludes by saying, "Hence there should be no public health concern about the consumption of raw milk cheese."

These are the facts: For raw milk cheese to be safe, it has to have been stored for a minimum of 60 days. It is unfortunate for those bent on eating it that no date is required on the label at the retail level. However, the experienced consumer should be able to tell from the flavor whether or not the cheese is sufficiently aged. Above all, the cheese has to come from a manufacturer or a retailer you trust.

Dear Ruth and Zak:

Having recently finished breast-feeding my baby and now expecting another, I am still concerned about the issue of contamination of mother's milk (with PCBs). My question is this: Is it more dangerous to feed a baby contaminated breast milk or artificial formula? A can of infant formula lists some twenty or so ingredients. Are these ingredients or additives safer than natural milk?

Also, formula-fed babies are usually fed solid foods earlier, which may also be full of additives. In other words, given all the alternatives, which is really the best and safest way to feed a baby?

I should mention that I lived in Michigan during the PCB contamination. — J.S., Hamilton, Ont.

Dear J.S.:

It is not appropriate to compare the contamination of a food with PCB with the presence of certain ingredients in baby formulas or solid foods. Chemical additives are not allowed in baby formulas and strained foods. What you see on the label are regarded as food ingredients which represent no health hazard to an infant. The presence of these ingredients is regulated by the Health Protection Branch of health and Welfare Canada, under the Food and Drug Act.

Contamination of mother's milk with PCB, if and when it occurs, is accidental and, therefore, not regulated. The only way to detect if such a contamination exists is by contacting the Medical officer of Health in the local Health Unit and arranging for a sample of breast milk to be analyzed. In Ontario such analysis is carried out in the provincial public health laboratories, at no charge, providing that it is arranged through your local medical officer of health directly or via your doctor. Only if the results of the tests suggest that your milk is contaminated need you switch to a baby formula that is suitable for your baby. The degree of contamination is not such that you need to deviate from your chosen method of feeding your baby.

The other point that we might raise in answer to one of your questions is that it is not necessary to introduce solid foods early while bottle feeding. The time of such introduction depends on you, the baby and the attending physician.

Dear Ruth and Zak:

Would you please comment on what effect lecithin granules would have on cholesterol and triglyceride, and if flax seed added to diet would help or deter in any way. I make my porridge mixture with 2 parts oats, 1 part Red River cereal, 1 part wheat bran, ¼ part wheat germ, and I add some lecithin granules and flax seed. This mixture has been a benefit in other ways, but I would like to know if it may be harmful with regard to cholesterol and triglycerides. — E.G., London, Ont.

Dear E.G.:

The porridge mixture that you fix yourself sounds fine. The lecithin would neither help nor deter your cholesterol and triglyceride levels. As far as we know, lecithin has no influence on them. So, if you find this mixture helpful, you may go on enjoying it.

Dear Ruth and Zak:

I am concerned about the potassium level in my diet. I am afraid that I may not be getting enough. Could you tell me what foods contain potassium? — M.K., Montreal, Que.

Dear M.K.:

Among the potassium-rich foods, we may list bananas, oranges and tomatoes and their juices, potatoes, a variety of fruits and vegetables, meats and cereals. If your diet contains these foods, you should be getting an adequate amount of potassium.

There are a number of conditions that might work to deprive your body of potassium or increase your needs of it. If you are on a diuretic, you may be losing more potassium than usual in the urine. Also, if you salt your food heavily, your need for potassium would increase. If in doubt, check with your doctor.

Sweet, juicy B.C. Blue Grapes are here again!

Pop them in salads. Pack them in lunches. Put them in pies. Enjoy them fresh from the fruit bowl. Sweet, juicy B.C. Blue Grapes are a zesty, refreshing change any way- any time.

They're delicious in home-made jams and jellies, too. So plan to serve their special fresh-fruit goodness all year long. Here are two simple recipes to get you started. Enjoy.

GRAPE JAM

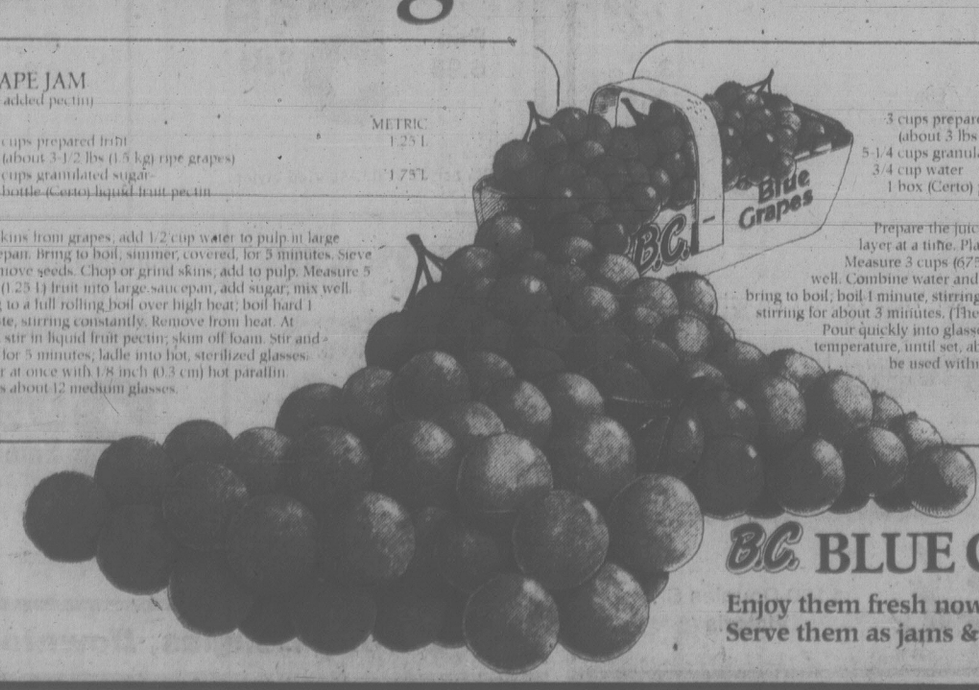
	METRIC
5 cups prepared fruit (about 3-1/2 lbs (1.5 kg) ripe grapes)	1.25 L
7-1/2 cups granulated sugar	1.75 L
1/2 bottle (Certo) liquid fruit pectin

Slip skins from grapes; add 1/2 cup water to pulp in large saucepan. Bring to boil; simmer, covered, for 5 minutes. Sieve to remove seeds. Chop or grind skins; add to pulp. Measure 5 cups (1.25 L) fruit into large saucepan; add sugar; mix well. Bring to a full rolling boil over high heat; boil hard 1 minute, stirring constantly. Remove from heat. At once, stir in liquid fruit pectin; skim off foam. Stir and skim for 5 minutes; ladle into hot, sterilized glasses. Cover at once with 1/8 inch (0.3 cm) hot paraffin. Yields about 12 medium glasses.



FREEZER GRAPE JELLY

	METRIC
3 cups prepared juice (about 3 lbs (1.3 kg) ripe grapes)	675 ml
5-1/4 cups granulated sugar	1.25 L
3/4 cup water	175 ml
1 box (Certo) powdered fruit pectin

Prepare the juice by thoroughly crushing the grapes, one layer at a time. Place in jelly cloth or bag; squeeze out juice. Measure 3 cups (675 ml) juice into large bowl; add sugar; mix well. Combine water and powdered fruit pectin in small saucepan; bring to boil; boil 1 minute, stirring constantly; stir into fruit juice. Continue stirring for about 3 minutes. (There will be a few remaining sugar crystals). Pour quickly into glasses; cover with tight lids. Let stand at room temperature, until set, about 24 hours. Store in freezer. If jelly is to be used within 3 weeks, it can be stored in refrigerator. Yields about 8 medium glasses.

B.C. BLUE GRAPES
Enjoy them fresh now.
Serve them as jams & jellies all year long.

Children Often Taken On Divorce Guilt Trip

My 28-year-old daughter and her husband are in the midst of a divorce. They have two girls, 7 and 4. It's sad enough for us to witness the divorce, but we are heartbroken about what's happening to the two children. Can't a couple of adults settle their problems without bringing such permanent unhappiness to their children? — Mr. and Mrs. K. R.

Dear Mr. and Mrs. R.:

It's most unfortunate when children are exposed to the almost inevitable anger and conflict that occur during the separation and divorce period. It's particularly unfortunate when children, defenceless as they are, are made to be the pawns in such conflict.

Long after the parents have made their legal and financial adjustment to divorce, the children are left with psychological problems that they, themselves, did not bargain for. Since physical health and emotional health are so closely intertwined, it is imperative that consideration for the destiny of the children be of prime importance.

The emotional safety of children should be high on the list of priorities that both parents must consider. It is sad to witness the emotional devastation that occurs when the ravages of anger makes one parent teach the children to turn against the other.

Many children develop a sense of guilt and, even though they cannot express it, actually feel responsible for the catastrophe that is happening to their parents. Even at the ages of 7 and 4, your grandchildren can be made to understand that their security will be intact and that they will continue to be loved and protected by both their parents.

As grandparents, you can play a vital role in contributing to that sense of security.

Is it possible to become suddenly allergic to food that one has eaten all one's life? — Miss T.I.

Dear Miss T.:

The whole subject of allergies is complex. Recently, a patient came to the realization that she could no longer tolerate milk. It was found that she was sensitive to a particular type of grass that cows had recently been feeding on. It is possible to become sensitive to foods (and even drugs) that one has always taken without ill effect.

dear abby

DEAR READERS: A few months ago I urged my readers to donate their organs after death by writing to The Living Bank for a donor card. The response was overwhelming!

I want to share a few of the heartwarming letters received by The Living Bank:

DEAR SIR: I wish to leave any part of my body that will help someone to see, or hear, or to make their kidneys function normally. I am living a healthy, normal life, but I know there are many people who aren't, so if I can donate my healthy organs after I die to someone less fortunate, it would give my life more meaning.

Please send me a donor card to carry in case God calls me home unexpectedly in an accident. I am only 14, but I know I will feel the same way when I am 18, because I have felt this way since I was 10.—CYNTHIA C.

DEAR SIRS: Please send me a Living Bank donor's card to fill out. My brother, Buddy, was killed instantly in a motorcycle accident two years ago. He was 18 and healthy, and such a sweet and generous kid, I'm sure he would have willed his eyes and kidneys—and any other parts that could have been used for transplants—had he only known how to do it.

What a pity my brother's death couldn't have meant life to two people who were waiting for kidney transplants, and sight to two blind people who needed cornea transplants. I think to bury perfectly good organs is a terrible waste.—TOM G.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN: I think Dear Abby's column about donating one's organs should be printed in every newspaper in the world. She has changed my mind about any "organ bank."

I am a Catholic, and now I realize that God wants only my soul. I want to give the rest of me to anyone who needs it.

Please send me a dozen organ donor cards, so I can give them to others who feel as I do.

God bless all you people involved in this wonderful cause!—MRS. JOYCE F.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN: I just finished reading Dear Abby and want to leave my organs after death, so please send me a card.

As Abby put it: "There is nothing I could leave after my death that would be of greater value."—JANET H.

READERS: To obtain a donor card, or free information about The Living Bank, in Canada write to The Kidney Foundation of Canada, P.O. Box 1100 CDN, Montreal, Que., H3S 2R1. It supplies a legal form for donating any body organ. Please enclose a long, self-addressed, stamped (14 cents) envelope for their reply as they are a nonprofit organization. God bless you. And He will.—ABBY

Fresh fruits are on the market and local gardeners have been gathering in the ripe delicacies from their own trees to make the best desserts of the year.

While peaches, apricots, dessert plums, pears and apples are at their nutritional best when enjoyed tree-ripened and raw, complete with their skins (well-washed, of course), other methods of serving will be welcomed.

Sometimes we want a recipe which uses one of our favorite fruits in a way that is substantial enough to be almost a meal in itself.

Today's recipe needs only a green salad with a chunk of Cheddar cheese or a hard-boiled egg to satisfy almost any healthy appetite as a complete meal. Yet it also looks like an elaborate party dessert to serve in smaller portions.

The Fruit Savarin is just an extra delicate yeast bread made in a ring mould or Savarin pan so that the dessert is more decorative. The same recipe baked in a 6 by 10 by 2-inch baking pan and served in squares with the fruit over the top fills the same purpose but lacks some of the decorative appeal.

Fruit desserts require little sugar

It is worth buying a ring mould or Savarin pan to use frequently for elegant looking food creations when you want to feel particularly successful. With a mould, any meal takes the form of a celebration.

So let us in British Columbia celebrate Thanksgiving by using local fresh fruits in a Fruit Savarin and see how little sugar is required to make a truly luscious dessert.

Fruit Savarin

- ¼ cup warm water
- 1 tsp. sugar
- 1 Tbsp. or 1 pkt. granular yeast
- ¼ cup hot water
- 1 Tbsp. sugar
- ¼ tsp. salt
- 3 Tbsp. soft margarine or oil
- 2 small eggs
- 1 cup unbleached flour
- ¾ cup wholewheat flour
- 1 Tbsp. wheat germ
- ½ cup skim milk powder
- 2 cups prepared fresh fruit (see NOTE below)
- ½ cup or more homemade plain yogurt

The name Savarin preserves the memory of Brillat-Savarin, a French master of the art of dining well who wrote a book on the art in 1825. There is still a chain of restaurants in eastern North America under the name.

To make the Savarin, measure warm water into warm large mixing bowl; add 1 teaspoon sugar and stir. Sprinkle yeast on surface and let stand in warm place for 10 minutes until frothy.

In a small bowl pour hot water over margarine, salt and 1 Tbsp sugar. Stir to dissolve. Break in the eggs and beat with fork.

The egg mixture will now be about same temperature as yeast mixture, so add to the yeast together with 1 cup flour.

Beat all thoroughly with large wooden spoon until smooth. Add remaining flour, wheat germ and milk powder; continue beating with the spoon until all is well mixed and light. The dough will be sticky but elastic in texture.

Have ready a 9-inch ring mould or tube pan, or a 6 by 10 by 2-inch baking pan, well greased and dusted lightly with flour.

Spoon the dough into the pan evenly and put into cold oven with the oven indicator set at very cool 95° F. or 40° C. When dough has risen half way up pan, turn heat off. Leave pan in oven to continue rising until double original height.

Then turn oven indicator to hot 220° C. To stop the rising and start baking.

After 10 minutes of high heat, turn indicator down to moderate 177° C to bake until the Savarin is browned, about 25 minutes longer. Cover with foil if necessary in last few minutes to prevent scorching. Remove from oven.

Run clean knife around outer edge and around the centre tube. Let cool in pan for 10 minutes. Remove to large plate or a small meat platter.

Prick all over the bottom of the Savarin with a fork to allow some of the fruit juice to soak in.

NOTE: Fruit preparation. Remove stones or pits from fruits requiring this; skin peaches, apricots or nectarines. Use fresh lemon juice squeezed over cut fruits to prevent loss of vitamins.

Keep one cup of the chosen fruit whole (berries) or in slices (peaches) to fill centre of baked Savarin.

Mash remaining fruit (it can exceed 1 cup if desired) with 1 tablespoon sugar.

With the baked Savarin pricked over, and still warm, spoon the mashed fruit over the surface allowing the juice to soak in. Fill centre with the whole or sliced fruits.

Just before serving, still warm, add one-half teaspoon sugar to the yogurt and use it as a thin border around the edge of the Fruit Savarin.

Serve in thick wedges with a spoonful of whole fruit with each. Will serve 8 to 10 pieces, according to sizes of pieces.

If unable to get the fresh fruit you want, use a 19-ounce can of fruit in a light syrup; check the label for sugar percentage, or it may state only whether heavy or light syrup. With the syrup, you need no extra sugar in the fruit preparation; in fact lemon juice will give a more distinctive flavor to the fruit.

Drain one cup of the fruit to fill the centre; drain another cupful and mash without sugar to spoon over the warm Savarin.

Serve with yogurt edging as above.

The syrup from the canned fruit will make a gelatine dessert the following day, or it may be used in place of water when cooking apples. Remember its sugar content, however you use it, and cut additional sugar to a minimumor omit entirely.

For Thanksgiving if cranberries appear on the market, make this delicious Fruit Savarin in the same way using a sweetened cranberry sauce over the top and in the middle as a luxurious centerpiece to the table. It would certainly merit the praise of Brillat-Savarin himself. Make the cranberry sauce at home with a minimum of sugar and only a few minutes of boiling.

Luxurious but inexpensive and wholly nutritious!

Mennonites Boast Success Taming Paraguayan Jungle

FILADELFIA, Paraguay (UPI) — "Kaputi Mennonita," Paraguayan soldiers would say to the residents of a German religious colony in the jungle wilderness at the time of the Chaco war in the early 1930s.

The soldiers were marching through the prickly underbrush of the Chaco to fight Bolivians, primarily for control over the region's few waterholes.

But the Mennonites, a group of pacifists by faith with ties to the Amish of Pennsylvannia, quietly tilled their land and tended their cattle in their city of "brotherly love" until the war dragged to an end in 1935.

The Paraguayans were partially victorious in the war. The nation extended its control over the West Germany-sized Chaco but have since abandoned it to wild boars, pumas, armadillos, jaguars and Mennonites.

The soldiers may have thought the eight-year-old religious colony, 250 miles from civilization, would fail.

But more than 40 years later, the Mennonite community is providing inspiration for the real conquest of the untamed region — that of opening the area for economic activity and settlement by man.

"The Mennonite are a hard-headed people," said 59-year-old Russian-born Jakob Neufeld recently in the living room of his two story home in Filadelfia, one of a cluster of Mennonite colonies in the Chaco.

Neufeld, the son of Mennonites but not one himself, came to Paraguay from the Vstula area of Russia in 1929, along with 4,600 others of his family's faith. From Asuncion, the group headed off by train, boat and then ox cart into the isolation of the wilderness.

"At the beginning we ate peanuts," Neufeld said in a heavily German accented Spanish.

GSA Rip-Offs Total Set At $100 Million a Year

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The total amount of money stolen from the scandal-marred General Services Administration is now estimated at more than $100 million a year.

Earlier estimates by GSA investigators and auditors had placed the amount stolen from the $5 billion-a-year building and supply agency at $66 million a year.

But GSA chief auditor Howard Davia told a House Government Activities subcommittee Tuesday that revised estimates based on actual fraud cases and agency audits revealed the total potential annual fraud is about $100 million.

GSA chief Jay Solomon told the panel about 50 GSA employees have been disciplined as a result of the growing investigation into mismanagement and fraud at the agency, and dozens more have been transferred to other jobs.

However, Solomon and his chief investigator, Vincent Alto, both agreed the recent revelations represent "only the beginning" of a chain of corruption dating back more than two decades.

Solomon also said Atlanta attorney Charles Kirbo, President Carter's close friend and adviser, has had "a very small role" in the GSA investigation. Solomon said he has had "little contact" with Kirbo.

Carter named Kirbo last month to monitor the investigation but Solomon said his actual role had been exaggerated.

In addition to the 50 disciplined employees, 12 GSA workers indicted by a federal grand jury last week for fraud have been dismissed from their jobs.

In a related matter, two senators sent Solomon a letter asking for the names of any senior GSA officials — past or present — under investigation for wrongdoing.

Sens. William Roth and John Heinz expressed concern "the investigation is focusing more on the actual perpetrators of fraud and abuse than on the officials who, knowingly or unknowingly, allowed it to continue."

The senators also asked Solomon to provide any information related to a recently disclosed GSA memorandum charging former deputy administrator Robert Griffin with trying to have the agency's chief investigator demoted and transferred for becoming "too strong an influence" in the agency's investigations.

Bus Fare Protests Flare In Guatemala Capital

GUATEMALA CITY (UPI) — Army troops and riot police firing tear gas and bullets dispersed hundreds of students protesting doubled bus fares in demonstrations that have left four persons dead and at least 50 others injured.

But the protesters tossed nails and tacks onto the streets of the capital today to keep buses stalled and support a general strike in the Central American nation of 6 million people.

A workers' group representing the major unions across Guatemala called for a general strike to support the anti-government demonstrations, which began Monday night when students took to the streets of the capital and burned 50 buses. The protests centred on a jump in bus fares from 5 to 10 cents.

Riot police and army troops loyal to President Kjell Laugerud Garcia fired tear gas and bullets into the air Tuesday night to clear students from makeshift barriers in the streeets of the capital of 80,000 persons.

Police said three persons were killed Tuesday. One other person died Monday, and another 50 persons have been wounded, officers said.

Police also arrested 200 protesters and several members of the National Typographical Union, accusing the workers of aiding a strike at the government-affiliated newspaper Diario de Centroamerica.

The demonstrators exploded a bomb in a sixth-floor bathroom at the Finance Ministry Tuesday night, causing damage but no injuries. Police said they also opened fire on the offices of a government radio station.

Other demonstrators hurled stones through windows of shops and homes and at the National Congress building.

Remnants of makeshift barriers littered the streets today. Motorists attached brooms to the front of their vehicles to avoid the tacks placed by the demonstrators.

Bus company owners have halted all public transport services, crippling the capital.

Government communiques broadcast on national television and radio asked parents to keep their children at home. High school and university classes in and around the capital have been suspended.

Pirates Hit Ferry

MANILA (Reuter) — Five heavily-armed pirates held passengers and crew of a local ferry at gunpoint Tuesday and stole at least $14,000 in cash and valuables.

REFUGEE STATUS CLAIMED

BURLINGTON, Vt. (AP) — Lawyers for alleged West German terrorist Kristina Berster moved for dismissal of U.S. immigration charges against her Tuesday, as U.S. District Judge Albert Coffrin questioned potential jurors.

Lawyers filed a motion on the trial's opening day, claiming the woman is immune from prosecution under a 1967 treaty designed to protect refugees.

Coffrin dismissed seven of the first 17 potential jurors.

Japanese Police Raids Net 1,505 Mobsters

TOKYO (UPI) — Japanese police Tuesday announced the arrest of 1,505 suspected gangsters and the seizure of drugs valued at $5.3 million in a nationwide crackdown on organized crime in an effort to halt a gang war in three cities.

Police also announced that they confiscated 49 pistols and other weapons.

The police announcement came in the wake of a gang war that saw the don of Japan's Mafia, called the Yamaguchi-Gumi, suffer a gunshot wound while visiting a night club in the ancient capital of Kyoto in August.

Police sources said Yoshiyuqi Yoshida, 35-year-old leader of the rival Dai-Nippon Seigi-dan (Great Japan Justice Society) ordered one of his followers, Kiyoshi Narumi, to kill Taoka.

Narumi, 26, shot Taoka twice in the nightclub. Taoka was rushed to a hospital and underwent emergency surgency which saved his life. However, the shooting incident apparently led to a step-up in gang disputes.

Narumi's tortured body was later found buried in the woods near Osaka, Japan's second largest city late last month. And another Yoshida follower was gunned down on an Osaka street two weeks ago.

Yoshida was among those arrested in the crackdown. He was taken into custody in Okayama in western Japan, together with his girl friend.

Another gang leader arrested in the crackdown was Yoshiharu Kodama, 51, head of another gang organization affiliated with Yamaguchi-Gumi.

Kodama was alleged to have threatened to cut off a finger of a 30-year-old member who expressed his wish to bolt the group.

'Chuckwagon' In Orbit

MOSCOW (UPI) — A Soviet Progress cargo transport roared into space today with 5,000 pounds of supplies for Soyuz 29 cosmonauts Vladimir Kovalenok and Alexander Ivanchenkov, who have been in orbit for a record 111 days.

Informed Soviet sources said Kovalenok and Ivanchenkov, who began their record-breaking mission on June 15, will return to earth later this month after stowing the fresh supplies and mothballing their Salyut 6 space lab.

The official Soviet news agency Tass said Progress 4, carrying a 2 ½-ton cargo of fuel and supplies, was launched at 2:09 a.m. (4:09 p.m. PDT Tuesday). If all goes well, the unmanned capsule should dock with the orbiting Salyut 6 space laboratory approximately 48 hours after its launch.

"The Progress 4 spaceship was launched for purposes of bringing fuel for the engines and different cargos to the Salyut 6 station and to further perfect elements of the design of onboard systems and equipment of the automatic transport ship," Tass said.

Another Soviet Defector Ailing In U.K.

LONDON (AP) — Anatoly Kuznetzov, a Soviet author who defected to Britain in 1969 and who was a friend of murdered Bulgarian defector Georgio Markov, is in critical condition in hospital, police said today.

Scotland Yard said there are no suspicious circumstances. But British newspapers said Kuznetzov, who suffered a heart attack three weeks ago, was deeply affected by Markov's death last month.

Markov, a Bulgarian playwright who broadcast to his Communist-ruled homeland for the British Broadcasting Corp. and anti-Communist Radio Free Europe, died Sept. 11 from blood poisoning four days after saying he had been stabbed with a poison-tipped umbrella by a man in the street.

Scotland Yard said he was murdered and is still trying to determine if his poison-umbrella allegation was true.

Kuznetzov, 49, has been presenting weekly talks for another anti-Communist radio station, Radio Liberty.

Scotland Yard is also investigating the suspicious death of another Bulgarian defector, Vladimir Simeonov, who was a friend of Markov and also broadcast to Bulgaria for the BBC.

Scotland Yard said Simeonov's death is "highly suspicious."

A third Bulgarian defector, Vladimir Kostov, survived a poison-dart attack in Paris in August.

CIA Links Soviet Secret Police To Former Agent's Death

Times News Services

BALTIMORE (AP) — The Central Intelligence Agency believes former agent John Paisley might have been murdered by Soviet Secret police because of his connection with the agency's satellite surveillance system, according to the Wilmington News-Journal.

In a copyright story today, the paper quotes unnamed high-level CIA sources as saying that Paisley was still serving as a consultant with the CIA at the time of his death.

Paisley's body was recovered from the mouth of the Patuxent River Sunday. He had 17 kilograms of diving weights strapped around his waist and a bullet wound to the head.

There was no immediate comment from the CIA on the story.

Meanwhile, Maryland State Police continued their investigation of Paisley's death.

The death is being investigated as "suspicious," said William Clark, a Maryland State Police spokesman.

Maryland Chief Medical Examiner Dr. Russell Risher said Paisley, 55, who was last seen Sept. 24 sailing his 31-foot sloop on the bay, died of a gunshot wound above and behind the left ear.

The fatal bullet was fired from a 9mm automatic pistol, the same type of gun Paisley was known to keep aboard his sailboat, Risher said.

The CIA said it is not involved in the investigation "in any way but we will cooperate if asked."

Paisley retired from the CIA in 1974 after serving as deputy director of the CIA's Office of Strategic Research. He had worked as a consultant to the accounting firm of Coopers Lydrand for the last six months.

CIA spokesman Dale Peterson in Washington earlier described Paisley's work as "analytical, not covert." Peterson said the Office of Strategic Research analyses foreign military programs, especially those of the Soviet Union.

Cpl. John Murphy of the Maryland State Police is quoted by the News Journal as saying that numerous CIA documents were aboard Paisley's sloop when it was found the day after the 55-year-old Washington resident disappeared.

"The coast guard turned the documents over to us and we turned them over to Mrs. Paisley," said Murphy.

Murphy said that Paisley was still involved in CIA activities. "They wouldn't tell us much, but they told us he still worked for them."

Positive identification of the body was made through dental records by the state medical examiner's office on Tuesday. An autopsy revealed that Paisely died from a .38-calibre gunshot wound just behind the left ear.

Bill Clark, a state police spokesman, said tests indicated the weapon was touching Paisley's head at the time it was fired.

"I see no reason to doubt that (Paisley's) gun fired the fatal bullet," Risher said.

The medical examiner said the decomposed body, identified Tuesday through dental records, made it impossible to check for traces of gun powder on Paisley's hands, evidence which Risher said would indicate suicide.

"There is no way of proving his death was a suicide," Risher said. According to the pattern of the wound, the barrel of the gun that killed Paisley was pressed against his head when fired, he said.

According to a close family member who didn't want to be identified, Paisley often had been depressed while at the CIA, but that in recent months he had been "happier and more talkative than he ever was before."

BRITS PLOTTED TO KILL NASSER

LONDON (Reuter) — The British secret service made detailed but abortive arrangements to kill Egyptian President Gamal Abdel Nasser during the 1956 Suez crisis, says a leading newspaper correspondent in a book being published shortly.

The book, entitled Inside Story, is by Chapman Pincher of the Daily Express.

Pincher says the British intelligence man in charge of the operation described how the assistance of some young Egyptian officers, strongly opposed to Nasser, was secured and special weapons buried near Cairo.

"They were never used because certain circumstances essential to the operation did not materialize," he says.

The Egyptian officers "were eventually dealt with by their president when he learned of their treachery," Pincher added.

Italian Guerrillas Kremlin-Trained

PARIS (Reuter) — An Italian left-winger said in an interview published in Paris today that members of the Red Brigades guerrilla group have been trained at a camp in Eastern Europe.

Renzo Rossellini, one of the founders of Italy's pirate radio stations, said in the pro-Socialist newspaper Le Matin:

"Through the relations I have had and maintain with certain sectors of the Palestinian resistance movement, I know there is a camp in one of the Eastern-bloc countries where Italians were, and perhaps still are, trained in urban guerrilla actions."

"There is in Italy today a veritable Soviet party whose aim is to destabilize the country in order to keep the Communist party in opposition," Rossellini said.

Rossellini said that at the end of the Second World War, an important part of the Italian resistance movement had come under the control of the Red Army.

"This sector retained its arms after the war and became the logistic arm of the strategy of the Russian secret services in the country," he said.

He said the original nucleus was revitalized in the late 1960s and now had a hold throughout the Italian extreme left.

"That is the origin of the Red Brigades and today they are backed by the military apparatus of the Eastern bloc countries whose emanations they are," Rossellini said.

Sadat Fires War Minister

Washington Post

CAIRO — Egypt's minister of war and the chief of staff of the armed forces were removed from their posts Tuesday as part of a major overhaul of the country's military leadership by President Anwar Sadat.

Coming so soon after the Camp David Mideast peace agreements and only three days before the annual military parade at which they would have presided, the removal of Gen. Mohammed Abdelghani Gamassi, the minister of war and commander in chief, immediately touched off speculation about unrest among the country's top officers over the terms Sadat accepted for peace with Israel.

Egyptian military and political sources said Tuesday night, however, that there is no evidence for any such theory.

They said, and diplomatic specialists agreed, that Sadat appeared to be fulfilling the pledge he made in a speech Monday to bring a new, younger generation of military and political leaders into the government to conduct the delicate transition from war to peace.

In addition, Gamassy will be part of the delegation Sadat is sending to Washington next week to conduct negotiations with Israel on the terms of a peace treaty and may even be named to head it, authoritative sources said Tuesday.

A shakeup in the Egyptian military leadership had been rumored for some time. Sadat's decision to let Gamassy and Fahmy go now, like his acceptance Monday of the resignation of Prime Minister Mamdouh Salem, appears to be part of his campaign to show the Egyptian people, and rest of the world, that this country has left war behind for good.

Cairo radio announced that Gen. Ahmed Badawi, former commander of the third army, would succeed Fahmi as chief of staff. Military officials noted that Badawi graduated form the military academy in 1948, nine years after Gamassy and Fahmy, and thus is closer to what Sadat calls "the October generation," the new leaders brought to prominence by the October 1973 war with Israel who Sadat says must carry out the transformation of the country now that war is in the past.

PENTAGON DENIES BEAM PROGRAM ON

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — The U.S. defence department denied Monday it was organizing a program to develop an atomic particle beam weapon by the mid-1980s.

Aviation Week and Space Technology magazine has reported that a program was being organized to develop weapons using charged electrons, protrons and neutrons to destroy enemy missiles.

Dr. Ruth Davis, deputy undersecretary of defence for research and advance technology, said there was no program for the development of a beam weapon, only an exploratory program to identify more formly the scientific uncertainties of beam technology.

"Unless something most unusual happens in the resolving of these uncertainties such a weapon is not possible in the 1980s," she said in a telephone interview.

She said there would be five meetings of scientists between now and December on what needs to be done.

Soviet Cars Invade North American Market

DETROIT (UPI) — The first wave of Russian vehicles has landed in Montreal and is rolling out swiftly across the Canadian countryside.

Thousands more are coming, tucked in the holds of huge Soviet ships. Within months, they are expected to reach the United States.

When that happens, U.S. motorists will get their first chance to buy and drive the Soviet-built Lada — a rugged subcompact car that made its North American debut this summer.

A spokesman for Satra Corp., a New York-based import firm that plans to distribute the Lada in the United States, said the car probably will begin arriving sometime in 1979.

First it must pass U.S. government safety and emissions certification and "other technical matters" must be completed, he said. Meanwhile, a network of dealerships is being formed.

More than 900 Ladas have arrived in Canada since Aug. 17 and are selling at a rate of 20 a day. The Canadian version, called the Lada 1500S, lists for $3,650, has a fuel economy rating of 30 miles per gallon and a top speed of 97 mph.

"People really seem to like them," said James Muir, a spokesman for Lada Cars of Canada, Inc. "We've gotten no complaints at all."

He said the firm, which imports and distributes the vehicles to 25 dealers in Ontario, plans to bring in 3,250 units by the end of the year and 7,500 next year.

The company has a five-year, $100 million contract with the Soviets to import a minimum of 30,000 Ladas plus replacement parts.

"We're selling it as a car with tremendous value and durability, and we play on the Russian mystique," Muir said. "It creates real curiosity."

So far, Muir said, the company has had no negative feedback because of its business relationship with the communist country.

"We had rather expected we might hear some protests, but it hasn't emerged. When you think of it, Canada has been trading with the Russians for years."

The car is a modified version of the Fiat 124, assembled at a plant built by Fiat on the Volga River 800 miles southeast of Moscow. The facility turns out 800,000 cars a year for markets in 75 countries.

The Lada is simpler, more durable and heavier than the Fiat — an adaptation to the tougher driving conditions in the Soviet Union and the need for Soviet motorists to maintain their own cars, Muir said.

"We see it as one of the few cars specifically designed for the cold Canadian climate. It's reminiscent of the early Volvo."

The body is made of thicker gauge metal, "like you'd find in a truck," and is factory rust-proofed, Muir said. The suspension is beefed up and the 1.5-liter 4-cylinder engine has been modified with overhead cams "and other funny little things."

Malthus Provided Clues For Darwin's Theorizing

United Press International

One hundred and forty years ago, a 29-year-old naturalist sat down in his London apartment to read an essay "for amusement." His eyes moved over the words and an idea formed in his mind.

The reader's name was Charles Darwin, and his idea was the theory of natural selection — the mechanism of evolution.

No other theory has shaken scientific thought more than Darwin's: That the environment could modify living organisms, and the modifications could be passed on to the next generation.

He waited 10 years to present his idea to the scientific community with the first edition of Darwin's The Origin of Species by Natural Selection in 1858. Its impact has been immeasurable.

Such thoughts were far from his mind when Darwin, as an easy-going, 22-year-old Cambridge graduate, sailed on the HMS Beagle as ship's naturalist on Dec. 27, 1831. He returned a scientist when the ship anchored at Falmouth on Oct. 2, 1836.

The five-year voyage took Darwin around the world. He explored animal and plant life on Tahiti, Australia, the South American Coast and the Galapagos Islands.

He noticed patterns. He saw 14 different species of finch-like birds with different-sized bills in the Galapagos Islands, and he noticed mice on one slope of the Andes were different from those on the other.

After he returned, he spentthe winter of 1836-37 in Cambridge preparing his Journal of Researches for publication. In the spring he moved to London. His mind was occupied with variations of plants and animals.

"I soon perceived that selection was the keystone of man's success in making useful races of animals and plants. But how selection could be applied to organisms living in a state of nature remained for some time a mystery to me."

On Sept. 28, 1838, in his bachelor quarters on Great Marlborough Street, came the chance reading:

"Fifteen months after I began my systematic inquiry, I happened to read for amusement Malthus on population, and being well prepared to appreciate the struggle for existence which everywhere goes on from long-continued observation of the habits of animals and plants, it at once struck me that under these circumstances favourable variations would tend to be preserved and unfavourable varations would tend to be destroyed. The result of this would be the formation of new species. Here, then, I had at last got a theory by which to work . . ."

In his notebooks, under the date of Sept. 28, 1838, Darwin made a note that determined the passage of Malthus that gave him the insight to conceptualize his theory.

Sealing Skirmish Possible

LONDON (Reuter) — Protesters opposed to the planned mass-killing of grey seals off Scotland are ready to stand before hunters' rifles as a last resort to stop the hunt, a Greenpeace spokesman said today.

"We have not worked out our final tactics as yet but we are determined to stand in front of the rifles," said the spokesman for the international ecological movement which has obstructed sealing off Canada's East Coast and elsewhere.

The slaughter of about 5,000 grey seals off the north coast of Scotland is expected to start within the next week.

The Scottish department of agriculture and fisheries has engaged about 15 Norwegian sharpshooters to do the killing. Their ship, the Kvitingen, will arrive here shortly.

The hunt, on the islands of Orkney and nearby North Rona, was ordered by Secretary for Scotland Bruce Millan in July as the start of a six-year plan to halve the growing seal population, regarded as a menace to fishing.

The plan has drawn protests from all over the world for fear it will do irreparable harm to the grey seal population. Half the world's grey seals are believed to live around the islands.

U.S. Searches for DES Mothers

WASHINGTON (AP) — An estimated four million to six million mothers in the United States and their offspring may face risks of cancer or other abnormalities from exposure to the synthetic estrogen DES during pregnancy, Health Secretary Joseph Califano said today.

Califano asked the 400,000 U.S. physicians to search their medical records and notify the estimated two million women who once were routinely given DES to prevent miscarriages.

He said it was widely prescribed during pregnancy "chiefly between 1945 and 1955 but, in a number of cases, as recently as 1970."

At the same time, Califano said a committee of the department of health, education and welfare (HEW) has concluded that the risk of a rare vaginal cancer in daughters of women who took the drug was not as high as originally feared.

Califano said the overwhelming majority of those exposed to DES during pregnancy will not suffer any long-term health problems, but "some will have serious health problems."

The committee estimated that no more than 1.4 DES daughters per 1,000 exposed to the drug will develop cancer of the vagina or cervix, and the rate may be as low as 1.4 per 10,000.

The HEW committee said that for the mothers themselves, the risk of breast or gynecological cancer "is unproved." But it said studies have raised "serious concern" about this possibility, and more research is needed.

DES (diethylstilbestrol) is still prescribed today as an estrogen replacement for women during menopause, as an anti-cancer drug in some advanced breast and prostate cancer cases, to suppress lactation in new mothers who do not breast feed their infants, and as an emergency "morning-after" contraceptive in rape or incest cases.

'ACTIVE TO THE END'

KUALA LUMPUR (AP) — A man said to be 118 years old who was fined for living out of wedlock with a 40-year-old divorcee last year, and then married her, died in August, says a Malaysian newspaper.

The widow of Lebai Omar Bin Datuk Panglima Garang told a reporter her husband died Aug. 12 from old age.

The widow told the reporter that her husband was active until his last day and loved her "very, very much."

She said their only regret was that they did not have a child "which he and I very much wished for."

Resignation Threat Over Tilby Invention

TORONTO (CP) — A senior federal civil servant says he will resign if political intervention results in a change in patent rights now held by Hawker Siddeley Canada Ltd. on a new process for separating sugar cane.

Mel Hill, general manager of the government-owned Canadian Patents and Development Ltd., said in an interview on the CBC program The Fifth Estate that he would resign if a Windsor, Ont., company gets full patent rights to the process.

In the interview, televised Tuesday, Hill said MPs have made a number of attempts to have the Crown corporation's board of directors reverse a previous decision and grant full patent rights to Arvid Machine and Tool Co. of Windsor.

The Windsor company, granted rights to certain uses of the new process, has challenged the Crown corporation's award of the main patent rights to Hawker Siddeley.

An independent report prepared for Jack Horner, federal minister of industry, trade and commerce, describes the existing distribution of patent rights as unworkable and unrealistic.

Horner said Tuesday that his staff is studying the report, prepared by Toronto consultants Peat, Marwick and Partners.

The report will be discussed by the Crown corporation's board of directors on Thursday.

The new process, invented by Ted Tilby of Victoria transforms sugar cane and sweet sorghum into various products, including automobile fuel and high-grade lumber.

A company formed by Tilby to develop the technology went bankrupt in 1974 and, since the government had made a loan to the company, the patent rights reverted to the Crown.

The government offered the rights to any company interested in developing the technology and Arvid was the only firm to respond.

It was offered the patent rights which were then placed in the Crown corporation's care.

The corporation felt the relatively small Windsor firm could not handle the project and the major patent rights were awarded to Hawker Siddeley.

"It's a matter of principle now," Hill said in the interview. "It's a matter of people not acting in good faith."

Hill said attempts have been made to have the Crown corrporation change its decision.

"I've had MPs phone me up. I've had nasty letters. It's quite remarkable."

Hill said that based on Arvid's performance to date he would not license the company to handle the full patent rights.

Fred Rajic, Arvid's president, has said Hawker Siddeley's machine is not as efficient as the one produced by his company and that Arvid will move its operations out of Canada if the patent arrangements are not changed.

A clause in Hawker Siddeley's contract stipulates it must manufacture the separator in Canada or lose its licence.

Both systems will be tested officially during the next cane season.

Phone Ad Scam Bared

LANGLEY (CP) The RCMP fraud squad here is warning businessmen about an adverstising fraud scheme involving persons selling space on plastic telephone book covers and other forms of advertising favored by small businessmen.

The promised advertising never appears and the so-called salesmen make off with the money, RCMP said.

"It's getting out of hand," said a police spokesman. "The scam is originating in the Lower Mainland area and spreading as far east as Saskatoon.

"They'll go into a little town and clean it out, then move somewhere else."

The spokesman said persons contemplating buying this type of advertising should demand proper identification, not just business cards, and phone the Better Business Bureau for a check on the company.

He said the checks are necessary because the con men keep changing company names.

A Rock-Hero Reception

By AUDREY JOHNSON
Times Staff

For a concert-goer with a long memory of events in Victoria, Tuesday night at the Royal Theatre was nostalgic and extraordinary.

Nostalgic because it is such a long time since the world's most legendary artists made regular visits to this city.

Extraordinary because memory does not bring back a single experience comparable to the artistry of Luciano Pavarotti, to the magic of his presence and to the near-hysteria of a close-to-capacity audience.

It began as he walked on stage, a large commanding figure with an instant-impact personality, a smiling geniality; yet at the same time conveying an effect of grandeur and elegance as he took his unvarying but easy position beside the piano, a large white handkerchief like an insignia, dangling from his left hand.

His first song was the lovely familiar Caro mio ben. He caressed the lingering legato phrases with that incomparable tenor sound which it is impossible to define without resorting to cliche. The sound is indeed pure gold, unsullied and glowing throughout its superb range.

As the last note died away the audience exploded. With the fervor and adoration of a rock-hero audience the people — young and elderly alike — shouted, screamed, clapped and waved, arms aloft, and towards the end were on their feet, whistling, stamping, roaring their enthusiasm between the several encores.

Pavarotti sang opera excerpts, some Italian songs, Liszt settings of two sonnets by Petrarch, the scintillating virtuosic La Danza, each piece revealing an artistry far more sensitive and thoughtful than was commanded by his great tenor predecessors, Gigli and Bjorling.

His flawless production seems effortless. His mastery of delicate pianissimos, ornamental passages, color and contrast; his superbly shaped and often inspired phrasing, all contribute to his unique stature on both the operatic and recital stages of the world.

When confronted with so gigantic a talent and personality it is easy to overlook the importance of the essential instrumental partner in the performance. But pianist John Wustman, an international artist in his own right, was a perfect match in artistry and keyboard brilliance, contributing much to the lustre of a never-to-be-forgotten evening.

Injunction Denied

A B.C. Supreme Court judge has rejected an application for an injunction to halt further expenditure of public money on a Ganges sewage system.

Although he hasn't seen a copy of Mr. Justice H. A. Callaghan's decision, Dennis Young, executive-director of the Capital Region District, said the judge felt the petitioners had not made a strong enough case for the injunction.

Three Salt Spring Island residents — Yvette Valcourt, Lionel Wood and Fred Sibley — filed a petition in August asking that the sewer project be stopped.

The trio, who represent the Concerned Citizens Committee of Ganges, are also seeking a court ruling Oct. 26 to set aside as invalid a decision of W. N. Venables, director of the Pollution Control Branch, directing the Capital Region District to install a sewage collection and disposal system at Ganges.

Judge Callaghan's recent ruling dealt only with the injunction application.

However, Young said the CRD's solicitors feel that since the judge has rejected the injunction application, the petitioners will be hard pressed to make a case for ruling the PCB order invalid.

Tourism Hits $1.5B in B.C.

VANCOUVER (CP) — Surrounded by an adoring clutch of several hundred persons who make their living from tourism, Provincial Secretary Grace McArthy announced Tuesday that, by the end of this year, foreign and domestic visitors will have pumped about $1.5 billion into the provincial economy — the greatest annual amount ever.

This 11 per cent increase over 1977 is due, she said later, both to the devalued Canadian dollar and the vigorous advertising campaign her ministry undertook. Mrs. McCarthy is responsible for the travel industry.

The total number of tourists in 1978 will reach an estimated 11.4 million, she said, about 675,000 more than in 1977.

Next year, having put the Captain Cook Bi-Centennial scene to rest, the tourism ministry will embrace "Good Times '79" as its theme. But, said McCarthy, they've already started.

Driver Caused His Own Death

A 21-year-old man who died in a two-car crash on Sooke Road Sept. 1 was responsible for his own death, a coroner's jury ruled Tuesday night.

The jury found Leslie Wade Morgan, 1029 Esquimalt, had been driving in an erratic manner at high speed and had crossed the centre line when he collided head-on with a car driven by John Fisher, 44, a visitor from England. Fisher was not hurt.

Evidence at the inquest showed Morgan had been drinking earlier in the day and had a blood alcohol content of .23, nearly three times the legal limit.

RHODESIA: Should War Correspondents Carry Guns?

Washington Post

SALISBURY — The question whether foreign correspondents should carry a gun in the countryside of Rhodesia is causing a lot of squirming here, more than any of the government's various censorship decrees.

For most of the increasing number of Western correspondents here, reporting the war is a professional task, and the idea of having to shoot back at guerrillas is abhorrent.

But the problems for neutral correspondents, or those sympathetic to the black nationalist cause for that matter, are becoming trickier. The truth is that no road in Rhodesia today, including paved highways linking major cities, is safe from guerrilla ambush. And now that the nationalists have SA7 missiles and have shot down one Air Rhodesia passenger plane, no aircraft is secure either.

Most editors forbid their reporters to bear arms, taking the position that if conditions are so dangerous the story is not worth risking their lives or the neutrality of the newspaper, radio or television network.

Yet the Rhodesian war story has become too dramatic and important for correspondents to remain in Salisbury. Thus a few television crews, photographers and reporters have begun arming themselves for their trips to the countryside on the theory that if they are ambushed a few shots in the air may scare off the guerrillas.

The issue of bearing arms came to the fore last spring when a British television reporter-photographer, Richard Cecil, was killed with a rifle in his hand while on an operation with a small elite Rhodesian army unit.

Cecil, the scion of a well known Rhodesian colonial family, may have been doing more than just toting his rifle, according to some reports. But even the most detached correspondents are facing the question, because the entire country has now become a battlefield.

There is nothing resembling a front, as there was — more or less — in the Ogaden region of Ethiopia. Nor can a reporter go into relatively secure area held by one faction or another, as during the Angola civil war. Yet it is difficult to see or hear any fighting. Rare is the Western correspondent who has witnessed a "contact" between the army and any of the estimated 10,000 guerrillas operating in the country.

Still the signs of war are everywhere — truckloads of troops rolling along the highways, soldiers and civilians checking in their rifles at hotel reception desks, special antibomb police units patrolling downtown Salisbury and occasionally blowing up strange parcels, and daily military communiques about how many more whites and blacks have just been added to the list of about 10,000 recorded war deaths.

Being white, as most Western correspondents are, in a war where the guerrillas tend to regard any white as a target, is an additional hazard. But being black is no guarantee of safety either.

MARK TRAIL

The Bridge Expert

By FRED KARPIN

In most deals that are played in a trump suit, declarer gathers in the opponents' trumps as quickly as possible. In today's deal, we have an example of the exception — not gathering in the opponents' trumps.

Neither side vulnerable. North deals.

♠ J 10 8
♡ K 8 5 2

WEST	EAST
♠ Q 7 6 5 3	♠ 4 2
♡ —	♡ J 9 6 4 3
◇ J 9 5 2	◇ Q 10 3
♣ J 10 9 8	♣ 7 4 2

SOUTH
♠ A K 9
♡ A Q 10 7
◇ A K 8 7

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♡	Pass
4 ♡	Pass	4 NT	Pass
5 ◇	Pass	5 NT	Pass
6 ♡	Pass	7 ♡	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Jack of ♠.

North's rebid of four hearts was an overbid. He should have contented himself with a simple raise to three hearts. When South Subsequently discovered that North had the missing ace and the two missing kings, he bid the grand slam (on the assumption that North had a well-above-minimum opening hand).

Declarer, upon winning the first trick with the board's queen of clubs, observed that even with a 3-2 division of the five outstanding trumps, some other matters had to be favorable in order for the contract to be fulfilled. At trick two he led a trump to his ace — and was shocked to find that the outstanding trumps were all in East's possession.

The ace and king of clubs were cashed next, South discarding his spade nine on dummy's king of clubs. Then the ace and king of spades and the ace and king of diamonds were played in rapid succession. A diamond was next ruffed with dummy's five of trumps — and declarer breathed a sigh of relief when East did not overruff. Declarer was now home with his contract.

A spade lead from dummy was made next, and East, with the J-9-6-4 of trumps remaining, ruffed with the three, South overruffing with the seven. Then came South's remaining diamond, the trick being ruffed with the board's king. Poor East had no choice but to play a low trump. Dummy's last trump was now led, and East's J-9 was entrapped by South's Q-10.

Actually, the hand is not a difficult one to play correctly after East has been revealed as the possessor of the five outstanding trumps. Nevertheless, South deserved a round of applause for a job well done.

FUN WITH FIGURES

By J. A. H. HUNTER

We have 3688 for the game today. Two 8's, one 3, and one 6. Using all four each time but no other digits at all, you form expressions for consecutive numbers from one up.

Any arithmatical signs may be used, but no summation or factorial symbols, and no words. Don't forget decimals, regular and repeater, also power and roots.

The limit without a break in continuity seems to be 100. I shall be glad to check solutions.

Here We Go Gathering Nuts

The gathering of nuts beneath one's own filbert or walnut trees is an exciting experience for both adults and youngsters. It is something like searching for buried treasure though it should be in short grass that nuts are discovered.

There is a magic in sunny days of October that lends a special aura to the job, for it is one that needs doing on several days once the nuts begin falling. They fall when ripe.

Walnuts and filberts must be picked up each day if the nutmeat quality is to be at its best. Lying in damp grass for 24 hours will start the molding process in English walnuts, for the rough shells are quite absorbent making extra care essential in our climate.

Both these nuts, walnuts and filberts, usually fall from the trees free of their outer husks, but those that are still attached must be removed by hand at once.

Nuts from the home trees should be washed before the final drying process, for dust collects on grass as well as from deposits from home oil burners, outdoor incinerators and passing traffic.

Drying must be commenced at once to get rid of the surplus moisture on the shells. Walnuts particularly will develop mold and an off odor in one warm night if left in a heap or in a sack or bag.

Nuts in the shell are most often sold in netted bags in the stores around the year's end; this is so that there is a constant air circulation around them until the customer gets them home. At least there is a reasonable chance of the nuts being sound at the time of purchase.

A few bags of walnuts and filberts can be dried at home by using these nylon net bags or others made out of scrape curtain material, or using old nylons.

Find a place in the home where a source of heat is fairly constant such as near a hot water tank, or above a heater. Hang the bags on nails from a shelf edge, or make use of a curtain rod by pinning the nut bags to a coat hanger bar then hooking the coat hanger over the curtain rod.

This is a similar system as suggested in Monday's column for drying everlasting flowers. As with the flower drying, heat must not exceed the safety point. With nuts it is 38 deg. C. Air circulation is even more important than heat, so that an open window near the bags of nuts suspended from the curtain rod is almost ideal.

If there is a constant or nearly constant heat source in the kitchen for instance, many home growers of a few filberts and walnuts will have no difficulty in getting their nuts dried quickly in a few days. The heat near ceiling level is much higher than at head or table level, not surprisingly since we know that heat rises.

Store the nuts until used in a dry but cold and airy place, in either net bags or brown paper bags so that moisture is not likely to collect around the nuts. Cold storage around 0 deg. C. is being used by commercial growers.

Each week or so, crack a few nuts to check on their condition. You want good nuts to use in the winter months.

Where Gold Price Is 'Fixed'

New York Times

LONDON — Twice every business day, five soberly dressed young men gather in a low, modern building in St. Swithin's Lane, a nugget's throw from the Bank of England, to "fix" the international price of gold.

But though the record-shattering gold prices that have emerged from these meetings have attracted worldwide attention, the room in which the London gold market operates is not much different from your average dining room — except, of course, that the portraits are of Rothschilds, that among the mementos is a bill the banking family presented to the British treasury to pay for the Battle of Waterloo, and that a little red light outside flicks on to indicate that one of the world's most exclusive clubs is in session.

The London gold fixings take place each morning at 10:30 and each afternoon at 3 when representatives of the five member firms, all leading houses in the gold trade, gather at N. M. Rothschild & Sons Ltd. They sit down at separate tables on each of which are placed a telephone and a small British flag.

Robert Guy, the 34-year-old official who heads Rothschild's gold and foreign exchange operations, takes charge, suggesting a tentative price reflecting his firm's orders to buy and sell.

"All we know here is the net position of our own dealing rooms," Guy said in an interview. "We are merely mouthpieces for our respective companies."

Like average dining room, except for Rothschild portraits

His job is to find a consensus price that will satisfy customers at all five firms. The telephone lines are kept open to make adjustments.

The process, which typically takes between 10 and 30 minutes, is thus more one of matching and concentrating market orders than is implied by the somewhat pejorative term "fixing."

"Because everybody who is anybody has his business concentrated here, the fixings give you an indisputable price at that moment. Nobody can say the price is wrong," Guy declared.

Isolated, individual transactions, on the other hand, might be questioned.

The price established here at Rothschild, which was gold broker to the Bank of England when it began holding the fixings in 1919, is important not only to the parties directly involved. It serves as the basis for industrial transactions and for valuations by central banks.

It is also the main benchmark for the continuous daily trading in bullion, coins and gold futures. One or another of the principal gold centres in Asia, Europe or the United States is open during 19 hours of the day.

The dealers, much like officials of the stock exchange here, disclose no figures about the volume of business done at each fixing. To do so, they maintain, would be misleading since an outsider would not know whether a large figure, for example, represented a few big buyers or a host of small ones.

According to Rothschild, there has never been any industry pressure to publish such data nor any challenge to its right to conduct the fixing. No new firm has joined the market in its 59 years of existence.

The other firms are Mocatta & Goldsmid Ltd., a subsidiary of the Standard Chartered Bank; Sharps, Pixley Ltd., owned by Kleinwort, Benson; Johnson Matthey Bankers Ltd., and Samuel Montagu & Company, a subsidiary of the Midland Bank. Midland also owns 16 per cent of Standard Chartered, which it consolidates, thereby having a stake in two of the five fixing participants.

The miniature flags are used at the fixing to signal Guy that orders are being adjusted and that a dealer needs more time to figure his position.

To do this he simply shouts, "Flags," and stands his upright. Guy cannot rap his knuckles sharply on the table to end the proceedings until the last Union Jack is toppled over.

Without strong measures from the Carter administration, Guy said earlier, "I think you'll see the price up around $230."

Oil Flowed On Mars?

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — The canal-like markings on the planet Mars may not be from one-time rivers of water, but rather from oceans of flowing oil, California Institute of Technology scientist Yuk L. Yung says. Yung said most planetary scientists accept the idea that the Martian atmosphere was once primarily composed of carbon in the form of methane and gradually evolved to its present state of 95 per cent carbon dioxide. Yung said there might once have been enough liquid hydrocarbons on Mars "to provide a liquid layer on the surface one to 10 metres deep. We think that kind of liquid on the surface may have been responsible for the channels on Mars today."

Saanich Sets Industry Park Referendum

Saanich council has decided to seek voters' views on the controversial industrial park issue through a November referendum requiring simple yes-no answers to three questions.

A proposal to present a more sophisticated series of questions — claimed to pinpoint public opinion with greater accuracy — has been shelved because the municipal solicitor believes this would not be allowed under the Municipal Act.

He has expressed the view that the act permits only a simple yes or no answer in a referendum.

The questions to be asked in the Nov. 18 referendum are: 1. Do you approve of building an industrial park in Saanich? 2. Do you approve of an industrial park in the Interurban area? 3. Do you approve of an industrial park in the Royal Oak area?

Ald. Robert Cameron failed to move an amendment which would have deleted the second and third questions, and then also failed to add a fourth question asking "Would you be willing to have an industrial park in your area?"

He wanted the deletions, he explained, because the questions as framed are unfair.

"It seems to me this would be similar to asking the residents of New York state to vote on the Quebec separation referendum."

Ald. Howard Sturrock also said he would vote against holding the referendum in its present form because he did not believe it would give council any clearer understanding of the issues than aldermen already had.

But Ald. Ian Cass said for all its inherent faults and weaknesses, the referendum is a much better way of getting some measure of the feelings of the community than anyone else has suggested to date.

MISSING ART MYSTERY

The case of the missing art is still very much a mystery at the University of Victoria's Maltwood Art Museum and Gallery.

None of the 20 missing pieces have surfaced even though many of them could be in offices on campus, curator Martin Segger said today.

Segger said the university should know in a couple of weeks if the art is still on the grounds.

A memo and photographs of the missing pieces are circulating and staff who know the whereabouts of any of the art objects have been asked to identify them.

There is no evidence of theft, Segger said.

He could not put a monetary value on the missing art because the collection [illegible] be evaluated in 15 years.

Some of the missing art has more sentimental than monetary value to the university, Segger said.

The art is covered under the university's general insurance plan, but Segger isn't thinking about reporting the disappearance to the insurance company just yet.

Replacing the art is also something is isn't thinking about yet.

Embassy Bugged

TORONTO (CP) — Global Television news says bugging devices have been found in the walls of the Polish embassy in Ottawa, according to Global TV News.

In a news broadcast Tuesday, Global said microphones were discovered in the walls of the embassy when workmen were renovating the building.

The microphones were removed and sent to Poland for examination.

Health Employees Face Federal Axe

OTTAWA (CP) — About 400 employees of the federal health department have been warned they may lose their jobs as of April 1 as part of the government's restraint program.

Paul Becker, assistant to deputy minister Bruce Rawson, said today employees have received notices that their jobs have been "declared surplus" and will cease to exist as of April 1, the beginning of the 1979-1980 fiscal year, at the latest.

But Becker said the employees have not received final lay-off notices yet as some could be placed in other jobs within the public service which become available through attrition.

The department employs about 10,500 people.

"We'll relocate as many of them as we can," he said.

"We may be able to relocate as many as half or two-thirds of them, although it's hard to say at this point."

The move is part of a larger government program to cut spending by $2.5 billion and eliminate 5,000 civil service jobs by April, 1980.

The health department must chop $83.2 million off next year's budget. This year, the department's budget totalled $11.22 billion.

The employees will be on the public service commission's priority hiring list when it is established Nov. 15.

Executives Eye China

Special to The Times

PEKING — More than 20 of Canada's top business leaders have arrived in China to begin an intensive round of talks with Chinese government trade officials. At the head of the privately-organized and financed delegation is Paul Desmarais, chairman of Power Corp., who has been the driving force in getting the group together.

A member of the delegation, who calculated that the businessmen presided over more than $35-billion in assets, said he and his colleagues had come to China with comprehensive proposals and plans for major sales and before they leave next Saturday they hope to have an important announcement.

Among the members of the Power Corp. mission to China are: Ian Sinclair, chairman of Canadian Pacific; Cedric Ritchie, chairman and president of the Bank of Nova Scotia; Robert Scrivener, chairman of Northern Telecom; David Culver, president of Alcan Aluminium Ltd.; Calvert Knudsen, president of MacMillan Bloedel Ltd.; Robert Richardson, chairman of Du Pont of Canada Ltd.; Frederick Kearns, president of Canadair Ltd.; Arnold Steinberg, executive vice-president of Steinberg's Ltd.

The arrival of such an important and high-powered Canadian private business mission comes none too soon and follows impressive inroads made recently in China by Japanese, British, West German and U.S. interests. With every passing month, the Chinese drive toward massive modernization is being taken more and more seriously by the Western business community.

Canada stands a chance of getting in on sales of technological, agricultural and retail commodities, although the businessmen will no doubt be urged to do their bit to help redress the current imbalance of trade between the two countries.

WCB NEGLIGENT INQUEST RULES

PORT ALBERNI (CP) — A coroner's jury has named the Workers' Compensation Board as a negligent party in the death of Jack Brueker, 36, of Parksville, MacMillan Bloedel Ltd.'s Alberni pulp and paper division.

The jury ruled Tuesday that the death was unnatural and accidental.

Brueker died Sept. 24 of massive brain injuries suffered when he fell from a scaffold while welding inside a cylindrical digester.

The six-member jury attached no blame in his death but named other workmen, management and the Workers' Compensation Board as negligent parties.

The jury recommended that if the same type of swing scaffold is to be used in the future, it should be bolted, and said the scaffold should conform to compensation board regulations.

Firefighters Canvassing

Oak Bay firemen are knocking on doors to prove to Mayor Brian Smith the municipality's residents don't want a reduction in the number of firefighters.

Firemen's association president Steve Yarmie said today the canvassing stemmed from a meeting he had Tuesday with Smith.

Yarmie said when the mayor was told the planned layoffs will reduce the level of fire protection, Smith replied: "Maybe the taxpayers of Oak Bay are prepared to settle for a slightly lower standard of fire protection."

Oak Bay council decided last week that three of 30 firemen will be laid off at the end of the year and another position left vacant.

Yarmie said the firemen began a door-to-door canvass of Oak Bay residents Tuesday and covered about 10 per cent of the area. He said they obtained 600 to 700 signatures showing that roughly 90 per cent of those canvassed were opposed to the layoffs.

Smith was unavailable for comment on the results of the firemen's survey.

Rejection Predicted

SAINT JOHN (CP) — Letter carriers throughout the Atlantic provinces probably will probably reject the latest contract offer from the post office, Gerry Lowe, business agent for letter carriers here, said Tuesday.

However, Lowe said, it is likely the offer will be accepted nationally.

The Saint John letter carriers earlier voted 80 per cent to reject the proposed settlement offer.

Dacoit Queen Ruled Gang Of Killers

NEW DELHI (Reuter) — The death of Hasina the bandit queen in a gun battle with police in northern India has highlighted the continuing struggle between the authorities and India's bands of rural outlaws known as Dacoits.

The attractive, 26-year-old Hasina was wanted for murder, banditry and kidnapping and had eluded police for more than a year.

They caught up with her after her band had been chased from Uttar Pradesh state into the Tikamgarh district of Madhya Pradesh. She and two accomplices were gunned down.

It was one of hundreds of such operations taking place almost daily in northern India.

In Utter Pradesh state alone so far this year police have killed 118 Dacoits and arrested more than 3,000 in a major drive against the outlaws.

An official spokesman in Lucknow, state capital of Uttar Pradesh, said the Dacoits were killed in more than 800 armed encounters with police in the state this year.

He said more than 1,800 firearms had been seized in the clashes.

The image of the Dacoit varies from that of a cold-blooded killer with a price of his head to a Robin Hood-type widely admired by local villagers.

Bandit queen Hasina seems to have come somewhere between the two.

Hasina, who once commanded a 22-strong gang, became a threat to law and order in two states and led many of the raids herself.

The story of Hasina — it means "the beautiful one" in the Urdu language — is typical of the poor and broken family backgrounds that often lead to Dacoit recruitment.

According to police records, the girl's father died soon after she was born into a poor Moslem family. The mother and daughter became waifs.

Hasina was taken in by an uncle and after an early marriage was deserted by her husband. Her second marriage in 1976 lasted only a year before she eloped with a lover and began her life of crime.

Her beauty attracted members to her gang. But most were arrested or killed in gun battles with police.

She was carrying on a tradition established by another woman gang leader, Putli, the one-armed bandit queen.

Police reports describe Putli as a crack shot and a ruthless killer. She led one of the most feared gangs in the Chambal Valley of Madhya Pradesh until she was killed in a clash with police in 1957.

Because she had only one arm, other Dacoits considered her bad luck. Putli, a former dancing girl, met her end when she walked into a police ambush.

The trunk road between Moradabad and Shahjahanpur, in central Uttar Pradesh, is one of the areas plagued by Dacoits.

Trucks and buses move along it after dark in convoys with police escorts. All civilian drivers are told that they make the journey at their own risk.

Police say the Dacoits usually operate in armed groups of four or five, using jeeps. Their main targets are often buses, especially those carrying wedding parties, and trucks with valuable cargo.

Trains running through the major Dacoit areas also carry armed escorts. But there are still frequent reports of attacks by gangs of train robbers.

In a recent case, robbers boarded an express travelling between Calcutta and New Delhi, robbed the passengers, killed a ticket inspector, then stopped the train and got off.

Sociologists say that Dacoits are not common criminals, but part of an institution rooted in tradition and fostered by a feudal system, poverty, exploitation and inter-caste rivalries.

India's most successful film is a 3½-hour epic on the reign of terror and violence of a Dacoit gang.

The film, Sholay (flames), released in 1975 and popularly known as the first "curry western", still is playing to packed houses around the country.

Reverse Attempt For Stella?

FORT LAUDERDALE — Defeated twice in her attempt to swim from the Bahamas to Florida, Stella Taylor says she might try once more to outwit the Gulf Stream — by reversing directions.

"I hate to lose," the 46-year-old British-born marathon swimmer said through parched lips after abandoning her latest attempt 46 kilometres short of victory.

She swam a remarkable 51 hours and covered an estimated 256 kilometres before giving up — two days and three hours after leaving Orange Cay, Bahamas.

Sharks, swelling, venomous jellyfish, scorching sun and bone-wearying fatigue had hindered Miss Taylor but not stopped her. In the end, her swim succumbed for a second time to the ppowerful current of the Gulf Stream.

In this swim and her attempt in August, she could not break out of the current and into safe waters near shore, although her first swim brought her to within 19 kilometres of Florida.

"She bounced against it like a rubber barrier," Joe Edwards, a member of Miss Taylor's crew said of the strong northward current.

But as she ate scrambled eggs Tuesday night and wondered what went wrong, Miss Taylor was already considering another attempt, this time heading the other way.

"I think I'm going to do the Keys to the Bahamas," she said in a telephone interview from a friend's home where she was resting after turning down a doctor's advice to go to a hospital. She said she could not afford a hospital stay, since she spends most of time training and has no job.

She estimated she had suffered 200 jellyfish stings.

Ralph Mazzoli, captain of the reporters' boat Idle Day which accompanied the expedition, estimated Miss Taylor's zig-zag swim covered at least 256 kilometres. But he said the true figure may never be known since calculating swimming distance at sea is difficult.

Nearly a dozen sharks were sighted while she plowed through the sea. None attacked, but she was forced out of the water periodically while worried aides frightened the sharks away.

While her talk of another try was not specific, her chief co-ordinator, Doug O'Donnell, said nothing would surprise him.

"She's not a quitter," said O'Donnell. "She's liable to do anything once she's well."

MEG PLANS TO REMAIN IN SYDNEY

SYDNEY — Princess Margaret has cancelled a trip to the Philippines and will stay in Sydney until she fully recovers from from a respiratory illness she contracted in the South Pacific.

The illness has forced the princess to abandon her role as the Queen's representative at next weekend's independence celebrations at Tuvalu, formerly the Ellice Islands, 600 miles north of Fiji.

Stars Attend Bergen Rites

BEVERLY HILLS — About 300 mourners, including some of the biggest names in the entertainment industry, attended a memorial service Tuesday for comedian Edgar Bergen.

Bergen, who became one of the best-loved comedians in the U.S. as the voice of mischievous Charlie McCarthy, died Saturday in Las Vegas, where he was scheduled to give a series of farewell performances before his retirement next March.

"He was probably the most unpretentious man I ever met," said comedian Johnny Carson.

Both Carson and Jim Henson, who was accompanied by his creation, Kermit the Frog, said Bergen had been an inspiration to their careers.

Bergen's wife, Frances; his actress daughter, Candice, and his son, Kris, occupied the front row of the flower-filled All Saints Episcopal Church, where funeral services have been held in the past for such Hollywood luminaries as Humphrey Bogart, Dick Powell and Howard Hawks.

Among the mourners were Charlton Heston, Carl Reiner, Eva Gabor, Danny Thomas, Ricardo Montalban, Fibber McGee, Dennis Day, Danny Thomas, June Allyson, Meredith Willson and Andy Williams, who was appearing with Bergen in Las Vegas and sang September Song to close the service.

Bergen's pallbearers included industrialist Justin Dart, actor Freeman Gosden (Amos of the Amos 'n' Andy Show), director Mervyn LeRoy, Art Linkletter, Rudy Vallee, Ken Murray and Milton Berle.

FitzPatrick Fired, No Cause Given

By MARK HUME
Times Staff

After 31 years service to the city of Victoria Terry FitzPatrick was fired Tuesday from his $30,000-a-year job as chief of the city's personnel department.

No reasons were given for the dismissal and FitzPatrick said he was shocked.

The 60-year-old official has been with city since 1947 and was just five years from retirement.

He said he planned to go immediately to his lawyer but refused to speculate on whether he'd sue the city.

"I just can't believe it," he said minutes after city manager Jim Bramley had delivered the verdict, reached in the mayor's office after three hours of deliberation by council.

"I've had nothing officially . . . no complaints either verbally or in writing about my performance."

He said that as personnel chief, he has had to fire employees over the years but he said he'd never have dismissed anyone in the style council dismissed him.

The firing came in the wake of a personnel department study by Vancouver management consultant Gordon Newhouse and Associates.

Newhouse has not yet filed a report with council but it is understood he gave a briefing to Mayor Mike Young. The mayor later contacted individual aldermen and raised the subject of FitzPatrick's dismissal.

Aldermen could be heard shouting as council met in camera for an hour in the morning and for two hours later in the mayor's office.

After the meeting some aldermen left by the back way to avoid reporters. Those who did face reporters wouldn't comment. It is understood Mayor Young won an oath of silence from aldermen after discussing at some length the legal implications any statements might have if the issue goes to the courts.

Although aldermen refused to discuss the meeting it is known that at least two — Larry Ryan and Robin Blencoe — were firmly opposed to the firing at the outset.

Ryan especially has voiced strong objections to Newhouse and the study, saying that personnel matters should not be dealt with by outside consultants.

In a press conference to announce the final decision, Young refused to give any hint as to how the aldermen voted or reasons for the decision.

"We're not dealing with the matter of cause or no cause," said Young when asked what FitzPatrick had done to deserve sudden dismissal after 31 years.

Neither would Young reveal the kind of settlement to be offered, but he did say that city hall staff had been instructed to work out terms.

"The agreement to be worked out with Mr. FitzPatrick will reflect whether it (the decision) is fair or not," added Young.

He also said he doubted the matter will ever go to the courts, indicating that severance pay to be offered was substantial.

As he left city hall shortly after hearing of his dismissal FitzPatrick said he was worried about his future and more immediately — how to tell the Camosun College class he teaches on personnel relations that he'd just been dismissed.

HOTEL BANDITS GRAB $1,500

Bandits hit two city hotels overnight and got nearly $1,500.

A Victoria police spokesman said $671 was taken from the Canterbury Inn, 310 Gorge Road East, after two men — one brandishing a handgun — the other wearing a nylon stocking mask, entered the lobby at 9:45 p.m. and ordered the desk clerk to open the till.

After scooping out about $470 in cash, the man wearing the mask forced the clerk into a rear office where he found a bank bag containing another $200.

The police spokesman said the same men entered the lobby of the Harbour Towers Hotel, 345 Quebec, about 12:35 a.m., and held up two employees counting out the day's receipts.

The masked man grabbed the money and then vaulted over the counter while his partner covered him with the gun.

The bandit also entered a back office and demanded the employee hand over a cash box.

Police said the men fled eith about $825.

Police said the gunman was in his mid-20s, stocky, with brown hair and dark complexion. The man wearing the mask was about five feet seven inches tall, slighter and with dark brown hair.

Dentists Plan 8.9% Fee Hike

VANCOUVER (CP) —B.C. dentists claim inflation has put the bite on them so they are about to nip their patients' wallets by an average of 8.9 per cent next year.

The new fee schedule issued by the College of Dental Surgeons of British Columbia is designed to provide dentists with a net income hike of six per cent in 1979, Kenneth Croft, the college's managing director, said Tuesday.

The hike is necessary, he said, to counter an anticipated 11 per cent general increase in the cost of doing business next year, including rent, salaries, equipment, and supplies.

First in line to protest the fee hike was the B.C. and Yukon Building and Construction Trades Council.

LATEST GALLUP POLL:

Liberal Support Slumps to 41%

Times News Services

TORONTO — With 15 federal byelections coming up Oct. 16, the Liberals had 41 per cent of the decided vote in September and the Progressive Conservatives 38 per cent, a Gallup Poll released today shows.

The poll by the Canadian Institute of Public Opinion shows the Liberals dropped four percentage points from August and that the Conservatives, leading everywhere except in Quebec, gained three percentage points.

The New Democratic Party had 17 per cent of the decided vote, up two percentage points from August. Others had the remaining four per cent of the decided vote.

The level of undecided voters, which dropped to 27 per cent last May and now has risen again, accounts for about one-third of the electorate, the poll shows.

It shows that the Liberals' share of the decided vote in September is two percentage points below their support in the July, 1974, election and the lowest since April.

The poll was taken Sept. 7, 8 and 9, during the time former labor minister John Munro resigned after admitting he had broken the party's code of ethics by telephoning a Hamilton judge to give a character reference for a constituent about to be sentenced for assault.

It also was during that time that Finance Minister Jean Chretien announced a pre-Christmas budget in the face of a dollar that had hit a 45-year low, the threat of double-digit inflation and close to one million people unemployed.

The poll is based on 1,013 interviews with eligible voters in their homes across Canada. A sample of this size is accurate within four percentage points 19 in 20 times.

"Byelections are always tough for the governing party," Environment Minister Len Marchand said as he entered a Cabinet meeting.

Following release of the poll, spokesmen for all political parties said the decreased support for the Liberals indicates the governing party will fare badly in the 15 byelections.

A spokesman for Progressive Conservative Leader Joe Clark said the poll "proves what we've been saying all along — that the Conservatives are ahead in all provinces except Quebec."

Estimate Changes On Way

OTTAWA (CP) — The government will revise its estimates of economic growth and the spending deficit when a new budget is introduced later this fall, Finance Minister Jean Chretien said today.

He also told reporters at an impromptu news conference that the government has no intention of changing its policy on the dollar, although its day-to-day tactics in the currency market will be modified to keep a few jumps ahead of international currency traders and speculators.

Meanwhile, the Canadian dollar strengthened further on international money markets in early trading today after having dived below 84 cents U.S. early this week.

By early afternoon it was quoted at 84.59 cents against its American counterpart on Toronto's inter-bank wholesale market.

It closed Tuesday at 84.39 U.S. cents after spending much of the day below 84 cents, dropping early from the 45-year low point of 83.89 reached at Monday's close.

Gold hit a record $223.00 an ounce on the Zurich and London bullion exchanges today. It was the second time in two days gold was above the $220.25-an-ounce high reached in London Sept 25.

The U.S. dollar dropped both on the Tokyo and European exchanges.

Shells Spark Beirut Blaze

BEIRUT (UPI) — Heavy rocket, mortar and artillery fire raged unchecked in Beirut today between Syrian troops and Christian rightists, knocking out all electric power and touching off a huge fire. The Syrian navy was reported to have shelled the capital.

The right-wing Phalangist radio said about 500 people had been killed or wounded in the past 24 hours alone in the fierce fighting that escalated despite international moves to arrange a cease-fire.

The Phalangist radio said that a Syrian naval vessel entered the fight, shelling coastal positions. It said Christian shore batteries opened up on the ship and forced it away.

Beirut radio reported the presidential palace was hit by shells, damaging the building and wounding three members of the Republican guard.

Rocket, mortar and artillery fire thundered over a 20-mile area north and east of the capital. As the two sides battled for control of a key bridge commanding the northeast approaches to the city.

The heavy shelling knocked out the capital's entire electrical power grid, cutting off communication with the outside.

Christian cabinet ministers threatened to resign if Moslem Prime Minister Selim al Hoss remained in office after Oct. 12, the date set by President Elias Sarkis for formation of a new government of

More B.C. Drivers Belt Up

More British Columbians are now belting up when they drive, says B.C. superintendent of motor vehicles Robert Whitlock.

One year after the introduction of mandatory seat belt use in the province, Whitlock claims the buckle-up habit is catching on.

He cites the fact that highway death and serious injury tolls are down so far this year, and also the relatively small number of tickets — 1,052 — issued to motorists for non-compliance.

Fines issued to the offenders range from $15 to $100.

Day Two: Union Bay

Marathoner Al Howie has passed the one-third mark in his run to Port Hardy to raise funds for the United Way.

After two days on the road Howie bedded down Tuesday night at Union Bay, 210 kilometres north of Victoria.

Howie, 33, says he's been averaging eight or nine miles an hour — it was 10 miles an hour on his non-stop jaunt from Victoria to Duncan Monday — and hopes to complete the 575-kilometre run by Sunday.

A United Way spokesman said Howie has raised pledges of $170 so far and more are expected as the week progresses.

BOY, 5, HIT

Names of the boy and the driver of the car were withheld by police.

Barrels of Death Rot In Delta Field

DELTA (CP) — Hundreds of barrels filled with lethal solvents, mercury and chemicals linked to leukemia are leaking and rotting in two fields in this Vancouver suburb, according to The Province.

Authorities at all levels say removal is not their responsibility, the paper claims.

Federal, provincial and municipal officials say that even if they did try to move the materials, they would find it extremely difficult to get a disposal facility in Canada to accept the volatile, toxic wastes.

Tri-Chem Refineries Ltd., which recycles dry-cleaning solvent, dumped the barrels and went bankrupt after operating for more than a year without a business licence or land-use contract with the municipality, municipal environmental officer Elwood Adams said Tuesday.

The municipality's environmental officers agree there is nowhere to dump the barrels, but maintain it's the landowner's problem.

The two couples who own the land said it would cost between $3 million and $4 million to move the chemicals. They said Douglas Harris, owner of Tri-Chem Refineries, has no money and they have no intention of pressing him for it.

Allan MacIntyre, of the federal environmental protection service, said tests taken a few months ago indicated

Pope Buried

VATICAN CITY (CP) — Under dark skies and showers, red-robed cardinals of the Roman Catholic Church bid farewell today to Pope John Paul I, the "smiling pontiff" who reigned only 34 days.

In the sadness and joy of ancient liturgy, the cardinals celebrated the funeral mass on the broad marble steps of St. Peter's Basilica.

Shortly after the start of the service, rain fell and thousands of umbrellas blossomed in the crowd jammed into the vast square.

The funeral marked the beginning of nine days of official mourning. On the 10th day, cardinals will be sequestered in secrecy in the Sistine Chapel to elect John Paul's successor.

Meanwhile, A traditionalist Catholic group in Rome has demanded a judicial inquiry into the cause of the pope's death. (See story on Page 2).

Got Pre-Quitting Jitters?

Some of the people who have promised to join the Victoria Times' quit-smoking campaign are getting jittery now that the deadline, next Tuesday night, is drawing closer.

And there's no point in pretending there won't be some tough periods ahead — particularly for those who are heavily addicted. Toronto writer David Cotter, the one-time 50-a-day smoker whose 12-week series of articles will provide the guidelines and support for the nicotine banners, said in last Monday's introductory article that it's really useful to think about the reasons you want to quit.

A pamphlet put out by the Canadian Cancer Society comes at it another way: "Why you started to smoke is not important. Why you continue is!"

So this gives you another angle to consider. Take a little time to decide why you continue to smoke even though you know it's bad for you, that it's a dirty, expensive habit and it's even becoming uncomfortable to smoke in public places nowadays.

The pamphlet says: "Be honest about it. Rationalizing your smoking through some reason you've read or heard of is simply kidding yourself. Because reasons why people smoke vary with each individual. Some people need the lift smoking gives them. And let's face it, smoking can increase your heart rate by about 40 per cent, which in turn delivers more oxygen to your brain and more energy to body cells and organs. Trouble is the

VATICAN CITY (UPI) — A traditionalist Catholic group has called for a full judicial investigation into Pope John Paul's death, questioning the Vatican's official account.

Civilta Cristiana, a group loosely linked to rebel French Archbishop Marcel Lefebvre, formally asked the Vatican city-state's prosecutor to begin an inquiry.

Italian Cardinal Silvio Oddi said he was certain the college of cardinals, now in charge of the church pending the election of a new pope, "will not hold even a minimum investigation and will not even discuss the argument."

But Franco Antico, secretary general of Civilta Cristiana Cattolica — Christian Catholic Civilization — said any attempt by the cardinals to shelve a judicial process would be "immoral and unethical."

"If President Carter had died under such circumstances, you can be sure the American people would have demanded an explanation," he told UPI.

Asked if he suspected foul play in the pope's death, Antico said: "We have our information which we have placed in the hands of judicial authorities."

According to the Vatican, the pope died of a heart attack late Sept. 28. Antico dismissed the official explanation, which came from press spokesman Rev. Romeo Panciroli, as insufficient.

"There were no doubts over the death of Paul VI, John XXIII and Pius XII," he said. "Here, there are doubts at all levels. Rumors about the pope's death are on everyone's lips."

Antico said Civilta Cristiana first examined the possibility of raising a formal allegation that the pope had been killed by a person or persons unknown. However, he added "we are not seeking a scandal."

He said Civilta Cristiana was asking more than an autopsy. It wanted a full judicial inquiry into the circumstances of John Paul's demise. There were many unanswered questions, he said.

"For a start, where is his death certificate?" he asked. "How could the pope's light be left on all night without anyone going to see if anything was the matter with him? He could have been in agony for hours. Why does the Vatican have no emergency medical service? At the very least, this was a case of negligence."

Antico alleged the Vatican was continually altering the official version of how the pope died and what he was doing at the time of his death.

"For us, all this is very strange — on the verge of the incredible," he said.

Although Civilta Cristiana, which claims about 50,000 members in Italy, is loosely linked with French Archbishop Marcel Lefebvre, Antico said the movement was wholly behind Pope John Paul, and he criticized Lefebvre for not trying to make peace with the pontiff.

A team of Vatican doctors inspected the pope's body after the basilica closed for the night Tuesday and the Milan newspaper Corriere della Sera speculated they may have conducted an autopsy. The Vatican spokesman, the Rev. Romeo Panciroli, denied the speculation.

"It was a normal check that lasted about 20 minutes, conducted by a team of doctors who are in charge of preserving the body of the late pope and who, since the first day after his death, have checked daily on the body's condition," Panciroli said.

"I am pleased to report that everything was found in order and everything will proceed according to program."

VOTE STILL IN AIR

Municipal Affairs Minister Hugh Curtis has notified the Western Sector Referendum Committee he hasn't made up his mind on allowing a November vote on incorporation of View Royal, Colwood, Langford and Metchosin.

He said he wants more information from his senior officials.

"We just have to take it as gospel that we will be allowed to have a referendum on Nov. 18," committee chairman Howard Drummond said.

The committee already has facts and figures on incorporation, and has arranged meetings Oct. 11 in Colwood, Langford and View Royal.

Curtis last year cancelled a referendum.

7 PANCO FARMS SELL FOR $4M

The provincial government has sold seven of its Panco Poultry farms for just over $4 million, Agriculture Minister Jim Hewitt said Tuesday.

The minister said the highest of 111 bids for 28 tenders were selected with no individual bidder taking more than one farm.

The provincial government now is reviewing bids for broiler farms owned by Panco.

The Social Credit government said last spring it was disposing of the Crown corporation, set up by the former NDP government after it purchased the private company for $5 million.

The present government said it hopes to sell it for $10 million.

Panco produces 35 per cent of the poultry grown in the province and has made a profit since the government purchased it.

The name of the fisherman has not been released.

The incident occurred at about 10:30 p.m.

Vander Z Bares Fraud

VANCOUVER (CP) — Human Resources Minister Bill Vander Zalm said Tuesday his provincial department has uncovered an illegal operation in which rent receipts are sold to people who use them to obtain assistance at ministry offices in the city.

Vander Zalm said his ministry's investigators are looking into the operation and that charges will be laid. He declined to give further details because the investigation is continuing, he said.

In an address to a service club, the minister said welfare assistance programs sometimes kill a recipient's desire to get out and find a job.

The minister also said that without new Canadians, farmers, hotels and other employers would have a hard time finding workers to do menial jobs which Canadians turn down.

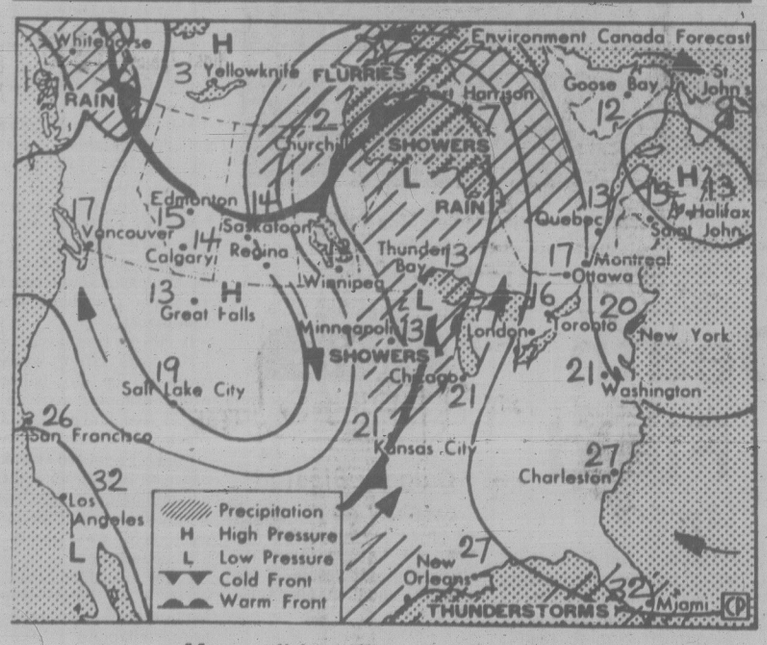
the weather



Map valid until noon Thursday

Dry autumn weather will continue over the southern half of B.C. as a fairly substantial ridge of high pressure maintains its influence. The combination of clear skies and long nights will allow fog to creep in overnight in many areas as well as encourage the appearance of a light frost across much of the interior. A Pacific front pushing across the Gulf of Alaska will spread rain to the northern coast by tonight and will continue inland Thursday, resulting in spotty precipitation in the northern interior.

Greater Victoria: Today and Thursday, sunny with a few early-morning fog patches. Highs both days near 18. Lows tonight around 6.

Greater Vancouver, Lower Mainland, East Vancouver Island: Today and Thursday, mostly sunny except for morning fog patches. Highs both days 16 to 19. Lows tonight 5 to 7.

North and West Vancouver Island: Today and Thursday, mostly sunny with patchy morning fog. Highs both days 14 to 17. Lows tonight 4 to 7.

'lift' wears off quickly and you have to repeat the process or you 'come down.'

"Now you see why at times your system screams for regular injections of nicotine. When you quit your system immediately reacts with something called 'smoker's tension.' You feel depressed and you are. When you reach this stage you're hooked and this is the main reason you smoke, although you may say 'it relaxes me' or 'it keeps my weight down by killing my appetite'."

Here's something else from that pamphlet: "The important thing is you have to want to quit. Want it bad enough to suffer those withdrawal symptoms you're going to have for weeks . . ."

By the way, if anyone out there has the idea they've been smoking so long that it's not worth giving up now, consider this: There is medical evidence that beginning one year after the cessation of smoking, the risk of lung cancer decreases progressively. And after 10 years of being off the weed, the risk is considered only slightly higher than for those who have never smoked.

That's just a little bonus on top of how good you're going to feel when you're through with nicotine.

There now are six members of the Times' newsroom staff who have decided to follow David Cotter's program and quit. Wire editor Bryan Hay has joined photographer Bill Halkett, reporter Derek Sidenius, sportswriter and deskman Jim Crerar (who jumped the gun and has been nicotine-free for three weeks now), city editor Bill Bachop and managing editor Gordon Bell.

Seventh spot has been reserved for sports editor Doug Peden, who is notably edgy about the topic. Could be a little persuasion from Doug's many friends would help?

And, letters from Times' readers are coming in stating they're willing to go public, have their names published as quitters and thus place themselves under the watchful eyes of relatives and friends for any signs of backsliding.

If you want to stop smoking and are willing to let everyone know it, send in your name and address to: I Quit, c/o City Editor, Victoria Times, 2621 Douglas St., Victoria, V8W 2N4. All names received up to Tuesday morning will be published along with the initial article by David Cotter. You'll be in good company.

Blaze In Beirut

national unity, according to Beirut press reports.

It was the worst night yet for the predominantly Moslem western half of Beirut from Tuesday night to Wednesday morning.

Moslem leftist gunmen appeared on the darkened streets of the capital, setting up flying roadblocks, stopping cars and checking identity cards.

For the first time since Syrian-Christian clashes escalated dramatically over the weekend, heavy shellfire crashed into the western sector.

But there was no sign yet of Palestinian or leftist Lebanese involvement in the Syrian-Christian conflict that erupted last February.

The devastating artillery barrages of the past four days deprived large sections of Beirut and its suburbs of not only utilities but also food and water.

The fighting — the fiercest since the Lebanese civil civil war ended three years ago — posed a threat to the Camp David accords on the Middle East engineered by President Carter.

At the United Nations, Secretary of State Cyrus Vance joined an all-out international diplomatic effort involving France, Saudi Arabia and the Arab League to contain the crisis.

Permission Needed To Air Interviews

OTTAWA (CP) — A federal communications regulation requiring a broadcaster to obtain a person's permission before airing a telephone interview was upheld Tuesday by the Supreme Court of Canada.

In a 6-to-3 decision the high court rejected an appeal by Ottawa radio station CKOY, which had argued that the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission (CRTC) had no power to make the regulation.

A provincial judge ruled in 1974 that the station had taped a telephone interview with a University of Ottawa student, then broadcast it without her permission, contrary to the CRTC's AM radio broadcast regulations. However, he ruled that a section of the regulations is not authorized by the Broadcasting Act.

The Ontario Court of Appeal reversed that decision and CKOY appealed to the Supreme Court.

The CRTC regulation says that a telephone interview or conversation cannot be broadcast unless the person's oral or written permission is given, or unless the person has telephoned to participate in a broadcast.

Barrels of Death Rot

the barrels were not leaking, but it is only a matter of time before they do.

"We regard this basically as a provincial responsibility, although we will offer our expertise and advice, which is what we did on the tests on groundsoil and water," he said.

Don Miller of the Provincial Pollution Control Branch said the branch usually requires industry to show it can neutralize chemical wastes before granting permits. No permit was granted Tri-Chem.

Adams said the barrels contain mercury, dry-cleaning solvents, benzene, toluene, sodium cyanide, hydrochloric acid and possibly other chemicals.

He said no ingredient tests have been done and scientists are relying on the wording on the label.

Benzene, banned as a consumer product in the United States, has been conclusively linked to leukemia.

The wife of the head of Tri-Chem, Marylou Harris, said Tuesday, the business has basically run out of money and she blames it on the failure of all three levels of government to fund the venture or back a recycling business now that the barrels are there.

She said she often sees chemical pumper trucks dumping chemicals into ditches and the nearby Fraser River, an issue over which she claims she got no support from Delta police when she phoned them.

She said her husband is unemployed, but would get involved with plans to revive the recycling business, especially if government funds were involved.

Delta may have one hope of a solution to what Adam's calls "the bomb in our backyard." Kempenfeldt Investments of nearby Coquitlam has proposed buying the factory and starting a chemical waste recycling business.

Laguna Land Still Sliding Away

COOLING IT: a lone fireman sits while spraying water over remains of an oil cracking tower that exploded Tuesday at Commerce City, Colo., touching off a $5- to $10-million blaze at the Conoco Oil Co. in which three persons were killed and 11 seriously injured.

LAGUNA BEACH, Calif. (AP) — The shifting earth under the town of Bluebird Canyon was still slipping intermittently Tuesday, endangering at least six more houses.

Authorities said they expect the movement to continue for another day or so.

Police raised damage estimates to more than $9 million after Monday morning's slow-moving landslide carved a 12-metre canyon through the expensive hillside neighborhood and moved $150,000 houses about like toys.

Two residential blocks dipped nine metres below their normal level and slipped downhill at least eight metres.

City Manager Fred Solomon declared a state of emergency in the neighborhood. He said the city will ask state and federal officials to declare Bluebird Canyon a disaster.

Tuesday's periodic earth movements toppled a few more telephone poles and further wrecked two already-shattered streets. Police Lieut. Al Olson said about six homes were hanging over the edges of newly-formed cliffs and "if we have much more ground movement we're probably going to lose those as well."

Olson said 24 homes were considered destroyed. He said those not torn apart by the sliding earth will have to be levelled because their foundations are gone.

Police reported only a few injuries, the worst being a broken shoulder.

Geologists were trying to determine what caused the destruction. An earthquake has been ruled out and there has been no recent rainfall.

Finnish Transport Crashes

HELSINKI (AP) — A Finnish air force transport aircraft crashed into a lake Tuesday night, and air force headquarters said at least 15 persons were feared killed, including three members of Parliament, a provincial governor, executives of several large companies and civic leaders.

The plane, carrying a crew of three and at least 12 passengers, crashed into Lake Juurusvesi soon after taking off from the airport at Kuopio, 389 kilometres northeast of Helsinki.

The passengers had taken part in a civil defence course given annually to civic and business leaders. They were on their way back to Helsinki.

Witnesses told the Finnish radio the plane "exploded in flames as it hit the water." Seconds before the crash the plane's captain told the control tower: "The right engine stopped, I'm coming back."

The twin-engined DC-3 was reported to have started to turn back at a height of 120 metres.

PEOPLE OF THE LAKE

By RICHARD E. LEAKEY and ROGER LEWIN

The ability to communicate through spoken language and body gestures sets mankind apart from the rest of the animal kingdom. When humans first evolved into rational creatures, they tried to better relate to their environment through language. Today, we continue to pursue this same goal. Understanding the ancient origins of human language makes us better able to comprehend human forms of communication today, as best-selling authors Richard Leakey and Roger Lewin explain in this fourth of a seven-part series from their new book, People of the Lake: Mankind and Its Beginnings.

The Origins of Language

Human possession of a rational soul carves out an unbreachable chasm between us and other animals.

The principal feature of our rationality is a language, the faculty of arranging together different words, and composing a discourse from them.

The question we have to pursue is, Why? Why is it that during the evolutionary journey from a speechless ape-like ancestor we learned the trick of stringing together complex sounds in a meaningful way?

Perhaps the pressures of natural selection planted in the heads of primitive Homo the ability for spoken language, not so that one individual could tell another what he should be doing next in the practical matters of daily life, but so that everyone could think more effectively about the world in which they made a living. The complex operation of an advanced gathering-and-hunting-economy would be impossible without a series of social rules that could be elaborated and transmitted only through the medium of the spoken word.

To the "Why?" question of language we have to add "When?" Did the birth of spoken language have to await the arrival of Homo erectus around 1.5 million years ago? Maybe real language is a relative infant in the psychological evolution of humankind, arriving on the scene perhaps a mere 50 millenia ago as the last ingredient of modern Homo sapiens?

If we had to rely on direct evidence sketched on the path to modern man, then we would have to conclude that words were invented just a few millenia ago: the earliest examples of recognizable writing appear about five thousand years ago with the Sumerian civilization. No one, however, would argue that human language has so short a career. And yet, apart from writing, there can be no other direct record of this essentially ephemeral product of the human mind.

'Why' may never be known

That spoken human language did emerge from the melting pot of hominid evolution is unquestionable. But, because of its nature, why or when it arose must remain forever the secret of times past. But the inexorable nature of human intellectual curiosity is such that we are bound to continue asking the questions.

Undoubtedly, a complex of evolutionary pressures must have conspired to put words into the mouths of our ancestors, but almost certainly one of them was the advantage of being able to create better pictures in their heads. The ability to see commonalities between objects of the same type — classes such as trees, fruit, predators, birds, etc. — is a crucial step in creating conceptual order in what otherwise might be an overwhelming perceptual chaos.

Creating and mentally manipulating images is a way of exploring your environment from the perspective of experience, and the sharper those images are in your head, the more effective you will be in exploiting that environment. Words — arbitrary sounds that name specific objects or events — are superb tools for sharpening and manipulating images in one's own head, and for invoking them in someone else's: book, storm clouds, black stallion, beautiful woman, handsome man, war — all these words may pluck images from your mind, images admittedly that differ from person to person, because of both the diversity of the world and the diversity of individual experience.

Words are powerful instruments for telling stories. They are less spectacular for giving instructions. We are not suggesting that the evolutionary force of needing to sit around spinning enthralling stories to captivated audiences was great enough by itself to upgrade a basic piece of mental circuitry into a fully operating language-producing machine. But who would deny that the facility to share experience — to create a genuine shared consciousness — would be evolutionarily advantageous to creatures whose unusual subsistence economy forced them into a uniquely intense social contract?

Our early Homo ancestors grew up and lived in bands in which individuals depended on each other for survival more acutely than any other primate ever experiences. Because of their mixed economy of gathering and hunting and subsequent food sharing, our Homo ancestors did need each other for economic reasons, and this tied the social and emotional knots even tighter. Sharing experience within the co-operating band through the medium of evocative language must have been an essential ingredient in the inreasingly rich social mix.

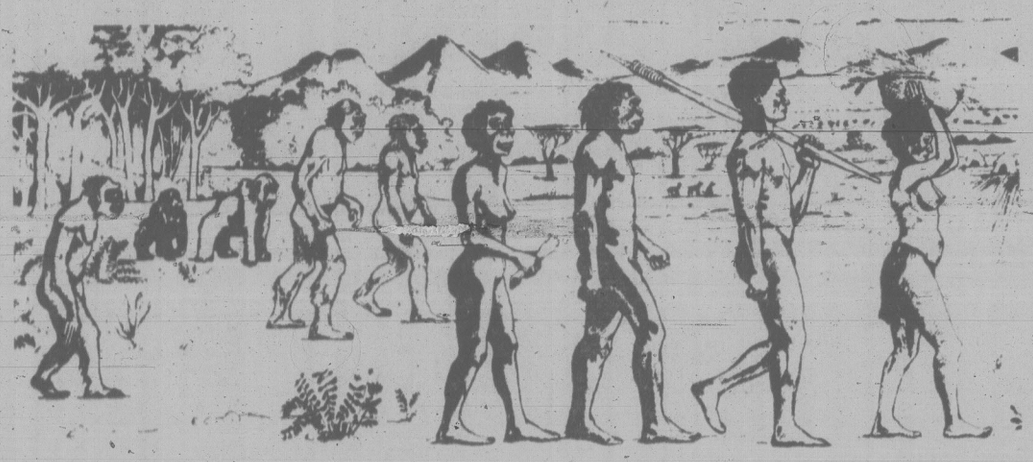
Without a commitment to social order, without loyalty to the band, an individual in a gathering-and-hunting group would perish and co-operative activity would be impossible. Throughout human evolution there must have been strong selective pressures for social conformity, and the structure within which people operated was provided by group culture: that culture would be impossible without a language with which to construct it.

As the sound uttered by our distant ancestors left no tangible trace in the archaeological record, how do we look for signs of emerging language in our past.?

One must first reflect only for a moment on any normal conversation between two people, or perhaps imagine the performance of a powerful orator, to glimpse the most obvious element of human dialogue: nonverbal communication, particularly gestures.

Facial expression, inflection in the voice, gestures of the hands and arms — all play an enormous part in human communication. This channel of communication is, of course, the only one open to the non-verbal animal world. One inevitably ponders on the possible role of elaborate gestures in hominids' early excursions into more sophisticated communication and symbolizing. If modern apes can learn symbolic signs and use them in a structured way, Pliocene hominids (between five and two million years ago) with their more humanly organized brains could also have been able to invent their own sign language.

Gesture language, combined with expressive vocalizations and facial movements, may well have been hominid evolution's "first attempt" at breaking through the communications barrier, only to be supplanted later by a vocal language with its infinitely greater capacity for handling information. Possibly the development of more expressive gestures and vocalizations (leading to spoken language) began simultaneously, with the spoken word proving the more powerful.



It would be difficult to refute the idea that meaningful gestures have been an important component of human communication for a very long time. We all gesture to some degree when we speak — particularly so when we are stuck for words! And the universality of many types of gestures and facial expressions throughout the world argues that manual signing as a means of communication is deeply planted in the human brain. What we now experience in ourselves, and see in others, must be the remnants of an ancient means of communication of some sort, but whether it was a forerunner of spoken language, or a concomitant of it, is impossible to say.

When we skim through the pages of the archaeological record, the evidence of human communication grows steadily more numerous as we move toward the present, and begins to include non-utilitarian objects: carved figures, pendants, and paintings.

Three hundred thousand years ago, a time when our ancestors were in transition between Homo erectus and primitive Homo sapiens, someone sat with an ox rib and carved on it a series of festooned double arches. Why, we don't know, but the pattern is exactly the same as that enscribed commonly throughout the period forty thousand to fifteen thousand years ago.

After the carved ox rib there is a gaping void in the archaeological record until more carved objects appear, such as a shaped mammoth molar tooth worked on by a prehistoric craftsman fifty thousand years ago at a place called Tata in Hungary. We don't imagine that our ancestors gave up converting their symbolism into tangible form during that enormous gap; there must be countless examples of ancient carving just waiting to be found.

Signs of repeated use

One of the earliest examples of "art" is a two-inch-long statue of a horse carved from mammoth ivory more than thirty-two thousand years ago. It comes from a cave at Vogelherd in south Germany and it is the oldest of several statuettes from the same sites. Produced with an artistic skill equal to that of the high point of cave painting in Europe and Africa twenty thousand years later, the horse had been carried around in a pouch and handled over a period of several years: the eye, ear, nose, mouth, and mane, which had clearly been carefully carved, were worn down by its prolonged handling. In fact, all the Vogelherd statuettes revealed the same telltale signs of repeated use; they don't appear to have been ornaments of self-decoration, but they may have been personal "good luck" charms constantly fingered absent-mindedly during daily chores; or perhaps they figured in repeated social ceremonies.

Whatever the specific use of these carvings and paintings, they speak to us of a truly human spirit that we all recognize in ourselves. We may not be the only animal who intentionally makes tools, but we are the only creature who sets out to manufacture strictly non-utilitarian objects. It is the mark of a fully maturing culture.

What has this to do with language? Although it is just about conceivable to imagine complex stone-tool cultures being manufactured by nonverbal creatures, it is impossible that abstract symbolism, such as we see elaborated during the past thirty thousand years, could arise in a speechless animal.

Without words with which to name them, a statuette of a horse, a rock painting, or a nation's flag, could never exist; they would be meaningless.

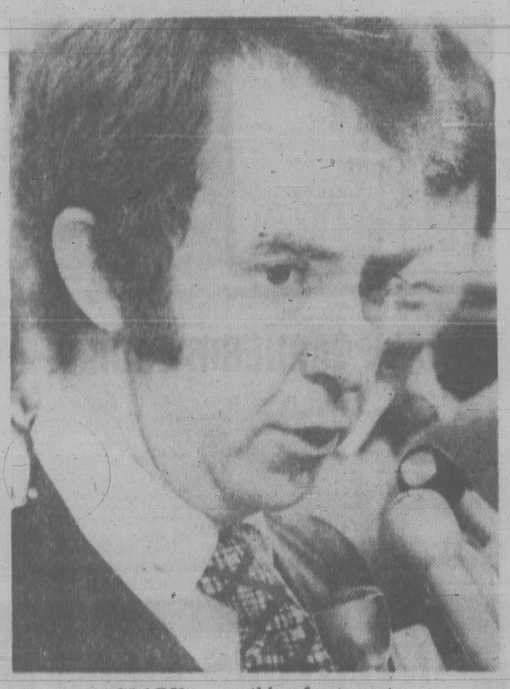
Tory Mortgage Plan More Help for Rich



CLARK . . . nothing for tenants

By LEONARD SHIFRIN

OTTAWA — Joe Clark thinks what Canada needs is a $1.6 billion income redistribution program that will give 75 per cent of its benefits to the highest-income 15 per cent of taxpayers.

As Talleyrand put it in response to an 18th century proposal of similar merit: "What you propose, sir, is immoral; but what's worse, it's dumb".

Clark proposes to engineer his giveaway scheme through the Income Tax Act, offering a deduction of up to $5,000 for mortgage interest and $1,000 for property tax. The result, he contends, will be a "major stimulant" for Canada's house-building industry.

Pointing to the fact that such deductions are a part of the U.S. tax system, Clark declared that the American experience proves that they work.

But whatever it is that the U.S. experience proves, it certainly isn't that.

Since there is no significant difference between home-ownership rates in the U.S. and Canada, to argue that the U.S. rate was stimulated by such provisions is to insist — based on absolutely nothing — that it would otherwise have lagged behind.

The U.S. experience does show, however, that a mortgage interest deduction will cause homeowners to continually refinance their homes, maintaining large mortgages for the tax advantage, and thus force up interest rates.

It also shows that shielding high-income taxpayers from most of the impact of property tax leads to more and more of the tax load being shifted to that form of tax — until a Proposition-13-style revolt is provoked.

The most incongruous result of Proposition 13 was that, while California municipalities lost $7 billion in property tax revenues, Washington gained $2 billion in income tax from Californians who suddenly found their deductions reduced. Those in top brackets were being reimbursed as much as 80 per cent of their property tax by way of income tax savings.

According to U.S. Treasury Department figures, in 1977 the highest-income 15 per cent of American taxpayers derived 75 per cent of the benefits from mortgage interest and property tax deductibility.

If that is what Joe Clark has in mind, then . . . yes, it works.

Tenants get nothing. Senior citizens with their homes already paid for get nothing from the mortgage deduction and, unless their retirement incomes are high enough to put them over the income tax threshold, get none of their property taxes rebated either.

A middle-income taxpayer with a modest home gets a couple of hundred dollars, and someone in the top tax bracket qualifies for a windfall of almost $4,000. (That's right. A $6,000 deduction is worth almost $4,000 in tax savings to someone in the top tax bracket.)

Tax relief aimed at shelter costs doesn't have to be done that way.

In fact, it is ironic that Clark picked Toronto as the scene for unveiling his proposals, because the Conservative government at Queen's Park is one of several provincial administrations which have instituted such measures on a progressive basis.

The Ontario tax credit applies equally to renters as homeowners, is reduced as income rises, and is refundable to those below the income tax threshold.

According to figures published by the Ontario government last year, the lowest-income 35 per cent of the province's tax-filers receive 45 per cent of the benefits from the program, while the highest-income 10 per cent receive only 4 per cent of the gains.

A similar program could easily be introduced at the federal level. In fact, a blueprint for it already exists.

The interdepartmental committee on tax and transfers integration, which reported to cabinet last year, outlined a whole set of refundable tax credit approaches which could be employed in place of tax exemptions and transfer payments of various sorts.

If the Liberals decide to tackle the Tories on the mockery they would make of equity if they ever got to form a government, proposing an Ontario-style credit as the alternative to Clark's U.S.-inspired brainstorm would be an obvious place to start.

The Signs Of Bad Taste

Since my name is not Yoko Lethargy, I am not unduly envious of people who can buy Yves Saint Laurent head-scarves. I am only sorry that no one called Kettering Elijah Whittleshank has yet gone into the medium-priced handbag business, since KEW are my initials and the only ones I want on my belongings.

But others, apparently, don't feel this way at all. Businessmen who used, smirking self-consciously, to have their own initials embroidered on their shirts would nowadays prefer something that indicates that the shirt belongs to Pierre Cardin.

Harrods, which likes to think of itself as London's classiest store, actually sells tote bags with the word Harrods on them, so someone must think them as valuable as a souvenir of the Eiffel Tower (though in fact it is worth buying something in one of their regular plastic carriers — their opaque green keeps the light off washed potatoes and so stops them going mouldy).

Swank shops in all our big cities are bursting with objects carrying the maker's initial — so much so, in fact, that half of them mean absolutely nothing to the uninitiated; and the clear-eyed, un-status-conscious young are just as bad with the name-tags on their jeans.

What on earth makes people want to carry other people's advertising around on themselves in this way? I once heard an expert say that "the little mark on your shirt which shows you paid twice as much for it as you need have done" is there to forestall criticism.

You don't have to ask whether or not the shirt is a ghastly color so long as it's plainly Jaeger; if it's recognizably the Charles Eames chair no one is going to ask whether it's actually comfortable to sit on (it isn't). The great pity of it is that no one has yet figured out a way of stopping people noticing what you really smell like by rushing at them with a box marked Lanvin.

The economics of it is simple enough: The great design names make far more selling their brand names to people who want to print their initials on boxes and wallets and trousers than they ever do actually designing anything — though the more it goes on, of course, the less guarantee there is that the master's own hand ever drew so much as a squiggle on a scrap paper.

But the "security" of a brand name actually indicates the exact opposite. Isn't it the girl who has real confidence in her bottom who would dare to cut off the Levi or Jeanius or Wrangler mark? Did 18th-century dukes insist that Chippendale put a big "C" on his chairs to show the doubting that they really came out of his workshops?

If people really knew how to tell a beautiful glass from an ugly one, would people ever leave the stickers on as they do? (One firm actually provides stickers that can be stuck back on the glassware once it's been through the dishwasher).

Of course not — it's a mark that you don't trust your own taste that you carry these signs around.

Me, I'm prepared to take a stand on everything with K on it except K Shoes, which don't suit me: or the glass bottle that my children gave me with "M" for Mummy on it (just like Beth embroidering "M" for Marmee in Little Women).

And if I ever find anyone called Henry Isambard Silas I shall not rest till I've rustled up another caled Harold Ezekial Rastus Smith and brought them together. The way things are going, they'll soon be the only guys in the world prepared to make HIS and HERS bath towels.
